MELLEN TO TELL ALL IN NEWHAVEN SCANDAL

Former Railroad President, It Is Announced, Will Go Before Commission This Week and Expose Big Financial Deals

Perjury Charges and Prison Terms Predicted as Result of Startling Testimony Expected in the Interstate Inquiry

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Charles S. Mellen, former president of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, is going to blow the lid off and lay bare before the Interstate Commerce Commission the entire scandal of the great system. This was learned exclusively tonight by the American.

Mellen will come to Washington probably during the present week and tell of all the financial manipulations which have made the New Haven a branded system. Loaded with the sins of others, Mellen during the past week intimated to the prosecutors of the New Haven, who have been pushing the case, that he would be willing to lay bare all he knows.

FINANCIERS PENITENT.

Penitent financiers associated with Mellen, it is thought, are responsible for Mellen's decision. A score of letters has been received by the attorneys for the commission asking what are the best steps to be taken.

Former Governor Folk of Missouri, now the chief counsel of the Commission, is given the credit for the great work accomplished since early March, when the investigation was started. It was due to his untiring efforts, say members of the Commission, that things have been brought to the present state.

"Governor Folk has proven such a net about the men who were mixed

Max Harden Declares Wilson Raises Doubts

BERLIN, May 2.—Writing in Die Zukunft, Maximilian Harden says:

Since March 4, 1913, Woodrow Wilson has been President of the United States. The result so far as concerns three-quarters of the people of the inhabited globe has been a cooling of the feeling of friendly respect toward the United States.

His acceptance of South American mediation was a triumph for Latin America—such a triumph as the Greeks and Montenegrins would have had if Austria had entrusted the settlement of its differences with Servia to their wisdom. It is no happy augury for the success of the Panama festival, which was to have shown Americans in the glorious role of sovereigns of their continent.

In his poring over books and papers, Professor Wilson has misread the lessons of life. He does not see things as they are, but only what, according to his schoolmaster's ideas, they ought to be.

Crippled Newsboy Shot by Woman

Mary Germania of No. 23 Charter street fired two shots at two unknown men in Haymarket square late last night, seriously wounding Louis Gould, a crippled newsboy, in the neck and inflicting a razor cut upon Patrolman J. T. Maloney when he attempted to arrest her.

Young Gold fell at the telephone booth inside the Haymarket Subway Station, and was picked up by companions and carried into the Relief Station. His name was placed on the dangerous list. The woman was locked up at the Hanover street police station.

The shot followed an altercation with the two men.

In the middle of the discussion the woman drew a revolver and a razor from her pocket. The men fled and her bullet struck the newsboy. The woman rushed after the two men, who ran up Blackstone street, and fired a second shot.

Patrolman J. T. Maloney ran towards the woman, who pointed the weapon at the officer. Maloney caught the gun before she could fire. With his other hand he secured the razor, but not before he had received a cut on the hand.

Ten Thousand in Woman Suffrage Parade

Half Million Look On and Cheer Marchers

Stirring Music, Picturesque Floats and a Storm of Waving Banners Mark Demonstration

Ten thousand women marched over Boston's popular parade course late yesterday afternoon to make everybody pay attention to Votes for Women. And everybody paid attention.

Some said that this most wonderful Suffrage parade in the history of New England was looked upon by half a million spectators. As to this, it will not be difficult to get up an argument. There were more people jammed from the police lines to the walls and the roofs of buildings than a reporter could count.

MEXICANS FIRE ON U.S. TROOPS IN ATTACK ON WATER WORKS

Force of Federals Opens Fire on Sentries at Tegar Where Two Companies of Regulars Were Guarding Pumping Station, According to Despatch from Gen. Funston

Mexicans Demanded That Americans Surrender Within Ten Minutes; Mediation Plan Gets Rude Shock; Further Hostile Action Against Americans Is Feared

WASHINGTON, May 2.—General Funston has telegraphed Secretary Garrison that a force of 500 Mexicans appeared at Tegar today where two companies of American troops are guarding the pumping station and after first apparently retreating, fired several shots at the American troops.

The American officers demanded that the Mexicans surrender and gave their men orders not to fire first. No casualties have been yet reported. General Funston fears that there will be an attempt to cut the water pipe lines tonight.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Mediation appears to have blown up with a bang following the official publication of reports from Vera Cruz that a Mexican force today attacked the American troops guarding the Vera Cruz water source at Tegar, nine miles out of the city.

General Funston reported tonight to Secretary Garrison that a force of more than 100 appeared near Tegas and demanded that the water works be surrendered in ten minutes. The Mexicans, after surrender was refused, apparently retreated. Later, the Mexicans returned, fired several shots at the troops and then left.

General Funston fears an attempt to cut the water pipes tonight and special precautions are being made to block the cutting. Secretary Garrison hurried to the President with General Funston's report before making it public. Funston further reports:

"Only two detachments now guard the water works and railroad station as the Mexican Federal troops have withdrawn from sight. One detachment is placed along the line of the water works and the other along the railroad, but at such a distance that one company could support the position if occasion demand. As the Mexicans appeared, a detachment of marines arrived to support the detachment at the water works. The detachment was composed of two companies, but after the Mexicans departed the reinforcements returned to the city."

The story of what may have been turned into a critical battle that would have postponed all mediation was told in two telegrams received by Secretary Garrison late today. The text of the telegrams is as follows:

First—Filed at 2:30 o'clock at Vera Cruz.

"Half an hour ago a force of Mexican troops appeared at Tegar where two companies of marines

SUFFRAGE PAGEANT MARKS EPOCH IN BATTLE FOR CAUSE

MARCHING HOSTS CHEERED BY THOUSANDS OF SPECTATORS ALONG THE LINE OF PARADE

Picturesque Floats Prove Feature of Great Turn-out in Behalf of "Votes"

The parade—part of a national movement, known for the time being as Woman's Independence Day—wound up in the fore part of the evening at the doors of Tremont Temple. That edifice was packed to the last atom of its capacity by a mighty Massachusetts audience come to "hear the speaking."

Many things made the day and the evening notable.

Spring appeared!

Weeping, for all these wars and the talk of wars, Dame Nature brushed away her tears, seemed like, and blessed with the light of her beauteous countenance, this demonstration of the women of the Commonwealth. Showing, perhaps, how the girls stick together.

The Governor reviewed the procession from under a marquee placed at the entrance to the State House.

The Mayor of Boston did likewise.

All three of the political parties snuggled up just as close to the Cause as it is possible for man to get.

Riding in the parade were Chairman Michael A. O'Leary of the Democratic State Committee, Hon. Thomas J. Boynton of Everett, the Democratic Attorney-General, and Hon. Roger Sherman Hoar, the Attorney-General's Democratic assistant.

Walking in the parade were Charles Sumner Bird of Walpole, twice recently the Progressive candidate for Governor, Joseph Walker, Progressive, and Norman H. White, Progressive.

Speaking, at the Tremont Temple celebration in the evening, was the Hon. Samuel Walker McCall of Winchester, who, "they say," has already been picked to lead the Republican cohorts in the gubernatorial campaign of next November.

ALL POLITICAL PARTIES IN LINE

So that at last, all three of the political parties appear to be in the way of being for suffrage.

Also the day was notable for the complete kerflumox of the Red Rose campaign of the antis.

The suffragist color was a lemon yellow and Boston's color yesterday was certainly lemon yellow.

The anti-suffragists had announced that they, and all who believed with them, would wear red roses.

Well, red roses were worn, but they were so few in the suffrage parade zone as to be decidedly conspicuous.

Miss Margaret Foley—the other politicians have begun to call her "Maggie" by the way—helped to make a joke out of the "Red Rosie" movement.

Margaret had an automobile all to herself. She carried the biggest red rose seen hereabouts for years. It never grew in a garden. It was half as big as Maggie Foley herself, and Miss Foley is not of the clinging vine sisterhood.

The red rose in her left hand, Miss Foley's capable right held a mammoth Votes for Women banner, in bright yellow.

In front of the State House Miss Foley whispered a word of command to her chauffeur (male) and brought the machine almost to a halt.

She appeared to be addressing a question to Governor David I. Walsh.

But the bands were playing like all possessed, and one could not make out what the Suffrage champion was trying to say. First she would hold out the Red Rose to the young Governor. Then she'd draw it back, and offer the yellow.

Lieutenant "Billy" Keville, one of the handsome young men of the Governor's staff, went forward to find out what it was all about. Miss Foley told him and, laughing, ordered the chauffeur to move on.

PUT IT UP TO THE GOVERNOR

"She wants to know which you are going to choose," Keville reported to the Governor, "the red or the yellow?"

The streets of Boston began to choke up with women and girls as early as 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The parade, which was to have started at 5, was delayed a half-hour. "Just like a woman," growled an occasional male anti.

Early in the day the objective point appeared to be suffrage headquarters in Boylston street, near the Public Library.

From this point everybody struck out for Beacon street, at Massachusetts avenue, or for Hereford, Gloucester, Fairfield, Exeter, Dartmouth, Clarendon, Berkeley or Otter streets, where they touch the avenue.

One hour before the bugle was to blow the "advance," Captain Tom Goode of the Back Bay police division closed the parade zone to motors and carriages from Commonwealth avenue to the river. The police arrangements were flawless. Captain Goode, in gray soft hat, gray business clothes and tan shoes, was everywhere, always in touch with his sergeants.

A distinguished motorist, who was thus shoved back out of the lines—but only a street or two—was Charles H. Davis of Yarmouth, that Progressive party man who has given more money to the Progressive cause in Massachusetts than any other man. The Davis automobile was a symphony in golden flowers and yellow flags.

Out at that end of town, and at about this hour, a gentleman standing in one of the side street held aloft a banner which attracted no little attention. This is what the man's banner said:

MEN ARE ONLY HALF THE PEOPLE; WHY SHOULD THEY HAVE ALL THE VOTES?

This was the rallying point of the Massachusetts Men's League for Woman Suffrage. The young man who carried the banner was G. F. Wolte of Newton. The officers of the Men's League are Edwin D. Mead, president; Joseph Walker, Francis J. Garrison, M. H. Gulesian, Dr. Willard A. Paul and Joseph F. Kelley of Cambridge.

None of these attracted half the attention that was given all along the line to Bertram Filene of Concord. Filene wore a suit or yellow which could be heard above the bands. The rig was topped off by a high hat, also of yellow.

Beacon street proper—Beacon street, that is to say, which IS Beacon street—showed little emotion over the doings. In all the street there were scarcely a half dozen yellow flags. Two or three showed the hostile red.

A window show which won many a laugh was that or the Phi Beta Epsilon House, at No. 287. Here, suspended by a huge yellow flag, was a large ripe lemon. Between the flag and the lemon was a card inscribed:

ANTI-SUFFRAGE.

and below the lemon fluttered another card labelled:

A LEMON THAT HAS HAD A CHANCE.

Invaders from all over eastern Massachusetts jammed into Beacon street and took it for their own. They occupied the front steps of the "most exclusive" houses. All along the street, from the avenue to the State House, the walks were black with people for half an hour before the start.

The most enthusiastic residents of Beacon street were the boys of the George W. C. Noble private school, at No. 102. They cheered everybody and everything, not skipping even the semi-occasional red rose.

Everybody's central point appeared to be the State House. Spectators flocked thither to see the Governor and the Suffragists at one and the same time. Governor Walsh did not conceal his interest in the paraders. For their part, the big idea of the and other voters with the strength of Suffragists was to impress lawmakers their movement.

BIG CROWD ON BEACON HILL

At the conclusion of the parade Governor Walsh said:

> The parade was most impressive and the leaders of the movement for Woman Suffrage, who organized and planned it, are to be congratulated.
>
> As was to have been expected, it was a demonstration by dignified and intelligent women, sincerely believing in a great principle.
>
> No citizen could witness this outpouring of earnest and high-minded women without appreciating the great importance of the movement.
>
> This day's event will serve to attract more thought and deeper consideration to the vital problem of Equal Suffrage.

The State House steps make just about the finest ready-made reviewing stand in Boston. Early in the afternoon Sergeant-at-Arms Pedrick had placed them in charge of a guard. Pretty soon came the rush of Senators with their ladies, and Representatives, with their ladies, and State House officials, with their ladies.

Governor Walsh did not appear until the advance courier—mounted—had reached almost to the gates. Then the Governor came down the steps and took his position across the way from the Robert Gould Shaw memorial. There were policemen everywhere. Also at and around this corner there must have been twenty thousand people; perhaps more. Ten or twelve of them stood on the roof of the Hotel Bellevue, and to persons below looked like manikins.

The Governor was attended by Lieutenant-Governor Edward P. Barry, Councillor Alexander McGregor, Captain William B. Stearns, Captain James D. Coady and Lieutenant William J. Keville. Back of the reviewing party the State House steps were occupied by women in the most charming gowns of a remarkably well dressed Spring. Even the Senate and Council balconies were crowded.

Elsewhere you may find a list of the organizations and groups which made up the marching 10,000. They represented all the towns and cities in the Massachusetts alphabet, from Athol to Worcester. They began with the beautiful mounted courier already referred to, and, one hour and a half later, the line was closed by a lovely picture called "Victory," a winged young woman in white, standing upon a marble platform.

All the military bands you ever heard of were in the procession, not to mention some gifted Scots in kilties. The women marched wonderfully well, considering, and those marched best who did NOT try it in high heels.

The State House group was visibly impressed by a map of the United States, with several States blocked out in yellow, to represent those advanced Commonwealths where women have the vote.

All alone the line there were Boy Scouts, with their first-aid outfits. They must have found a lot to do, for the ambulances were busy for two hours. Last night the relief stations reported that seldom, if ever, have they cared for so many women overcome in the streets. It is worth mentioning that none of those so overcome—so far as can be learned—was a parader.

A man in the parade who carried a card bearing the inscription sent many a man (and some women) hunting last night for the family Bible.

Another bright spot in the parade was the gentleman in the limousine carrying license No. 14,146, who stopped the parade in front of the State House long enough to take a snap-shot of the Governor.

Two young men on the Park street balcony nearest to Beacon street attracted a lot of attention to themselves by flashing two women's coats, turned inside out, so as to show the bright red silk lining. For a long time this was supposed to be an "anti" demonstration. It was censured accordingly. When the Harvard Suffrage group appeared, however, the "H-a-r-v-a-r-d" cry came from the two Red Coats and public opinion cooled down accordingly.

YELLOW BALLOONS SENT UP

In front of the reviewing stand the Junior Suffragists let loose a large flock of yellow balloons. Governor Walsh thought this one of the prettiest touches of the day. Every balloon was marked "Votes for Women."

"Famous Women of History" was a triumph all along the line. The pretty "Joan of Arc" was Miss Gwendolyn Percy. The lovely "Pocohontas," just behind her — also mounted—was Miss Salita Salano. The Governor received a dozen splendid salutes during the day. One of them—an extra nice one—came from "Pocohontas." Miss Stephenson and Miss Salano are well known newspaper writers.

It was after the "Famous Women of History" that Miss aMrgaret Foley appeared and, immediately following, the division of Self-Supporting Women.

There were stenographers and artists and physicians and lawyers, law students, nurses, teachers, writers and players.

Governor Walsh applauded continually, but the Self-Supporting Women division received most of the gubernatorial attention. Also the women and girls of this division gave the Governor the most attention.

The Men's League made a big hit at the State House, the State House group taking quick note of not, only Brother Joe Walker and Brother Norman White, but also of Brother Samuel L. Powers and Brother Jerry McCarthy, one time the Republican suhveyor of the port.

At the State House corner the mighty procession had concluded about one-third of the route through School street, up Washington to Eliot, around to the Lincoln statue in Park square and then back through Tremont street to the Temple.

PARADE BREAKS RECORDS

Half a million people saw the big parade, according to the police.

Ten thousand marched in the procession—8,500 women and 1,500 men.

It was a record parade crowd for Boston—and the parade was a record demonstration for New England women.

Forty thousand persons watched the parade at Washington, School and Milk streets.

A similar throng was massed at Tremont, School and Beacon streets.

So great was the crush that men and women fainted, and the police and hospital ambulances were kept busy.

Nine hundred policemen did parade duty.

"It was a magnificent success and a great triumph for suffrage," said Mrs. Thomas Pelham Curtis, grand marshal of the parade.

Said Governor Walsh:

"The parade was most impressive and the leaders of the movement for woman suffrage, who organized and planned it, are to be congratulated."

Said Mayor Curley:

"It was the greatest demonstration I ever witnessed."

The "antis" said the parade was a "failure."

WOMEN ALL OVER COUNTRY CELEBRATE SUFFRAGE DAY

NEW YORK, May 2.—"Woman's Independence Day" was observed all over the country today, the yellow banners of the suffragists making it a veritable national yellow day.

In this city the celebration took the form of parades, meetings, oratory, teas and band concerts.

There were meetings in the various parks and a mass meeting in Carnegie Hall tonight, at which Mayor Mitchel and Commissioner of Correction, Katherine B. Lewis, the only woman in the Mayors' cabinet spoke. Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch presided.

The celebration opened with a gathering of the seven big suffrage organizations of the State in Washington Park, after which there was a procession of two hundred automobiles up Fifth avenue, each motor being swathed in the suffrage colors. Seven of the cars switched off to the Polo Grounds, where suffrage orators addressed the baseball fans.

BIG PARADE IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, May 2.—Two solid miles of women marchers with bands to lead the way and a division of women cavalry bringing up the rear made up the Chicago suffrage parade. The only regalia required was a suffrage cap, white and gold stars and "Illinois" in gold letters, and a flag. To avoid question of precedence, the marchers assembled by wards and not by clubs, social, political, church or other organizations.

The parade was headed by a squad of mounted police and a detail of cavalry, followed by Grand Marshal Mrs. Grace Wilbur Tout, president of the Illinois Equal Suffrage Association.

HARTFORD CELEBRATES.

HARTFORD, May 2.—The first general demonstration of the equal suffragists of Connecticut was held here today. Supporters of the movement accompanied the marching delegates to the city from every part of the State. The parade, in which upwards of a thousand women marched, was formed at the State Capitol.

PENNSYLVANIA LOYAL.

PITTSBURGH, May 2.—In sixty Pennsylvania towns suffrage parades were held this afternoon while female spellbinders added to the activities by encouraging the suffrage movement.

The largest celebration was held here where a great foot and automobile parade was viewed by 100,000 persons.

PARADES IN MISSOURI.

KANSAS CITY, May 2.—Missouri's demonstration for woman suffrage today was featured here by a parade of 100 motor cars carrying adherents of the cause. The procession was led by the "Old Kansas Guard," made up of women who were prominent in obtaining the suffrage in Kansas.

Sixty automobiles, carrying 300 women and a number of men, formed the suffrage parade at St. Louis.

NEWPORT, R. I., May 2.—Brief addresses, singing of the suffrage hymn and the passage of a resolution memorializing Congress, featured a meeting here today under the auspices of the Newport County Woman Suffrage League. A trumpet blast was the signal of the opening of the meeting. The invitations, large sheets of yellow paper in white envelopes, proved the greatest feature to some of the women interested in the movement.

BIG CROWD GREETS SPEAKERS IN TEMPLE

Every seat in Tremont Temple was taken last night when the suffragists, tired and footsore, gathered to celebrate their great parade and listen to speakers for the cause.

A feature of the meeting was the collection. It is estimated that nearly $1,000 was contributed to the suffrage cause, while nearly $600 in pledges ranging, from $100 to $1, were made by men and women.

The entire audience was in a most jubilant spirit and their facial expressions plainly showed that they were pleased at the success of the afternoon parade.

Mrs. John Leonard, chairman of the executive committee, presided, and after thanking the women for turning out and making such a strong and perfect showing, introduced Miss Alice Stone Blackwell. Miss Blackwell said that Massachusetts was on the verge of a great victory, that in 1915 women would be permitted to vote. She described the parade as a forerunner of final victory.

TRIUMPH IS CERTAIN.

Mrs. Stanley McCormick, one of the officers of the National Suffrage Association, was the next speaker. "No city is the same after a suffrage parade," she said. "Seeing is believing, and men cannot stand with their mothers, wives, sisters or sweethearts and see women march as they did today without realizing that they are face to face with a great moral issue. Triumph is certain and sure for the equal rights cause in Massachusetts.

"Nothing is foregn to the woman who demands the ballot. The pioneers conceived the idea that it is our duty to accomplish their desires, to make out of a floating idea a granite fact, and when we get the vote we will use it for the men, the children and the women, regardless of who they are."

Congressman Samuel W. McCall of Winchester was the first man to be called upon. He said that the present government was not a government of the people, by the people, but a government of men, by the men, for the men.

"Give democracy a trial. It has never had a trial yet," he said.

"Give it a good trial by allowing the women the right to vote. I want to congratulate you on the fact that you have accomplished so much in America wihout the aid of violence. Your recruiting has been wonderful, your followers many and they are still going to join the cause."

TOO MUCH "FATHER."

Much humor was injected into the mass meeting when Mrs. Harriett Taylor Upton of Ohio spoke. "This great country is fathered to death and it is about time it was 'mothered.'"

She declared it is not enough to believe in suffrage. Get out and do something. We can work out our own salvation. This is not a sex war, and when we get the vot the bonds of friendship between men and women will be greatly strengthened.'

Mrs. Maude Howe Elliot, daughter of the late Julia Ward Howe, spoke of her mother and told of the work that had been done by her for the cause. Her words appealed to every one, and when the question of running expenses was reached, almost every one in the temple put a coin into the contribution box. She asked for pledges and Mrs. Thomas P. Curtis, the chief marshal of the parade, responded with a $25 offer.

Others who followed were: Mrs. Mary P. Feary, $100; Miss Mabel Willard, $100; Mrs. K. P. Adams, $25; Mrs. Lewis J. Johnson, $25; "James," No. 330 Commonwealth avenue, $50; two five dollar checks in honor of a grandchild, and Mrs. J. T. Thompson pledged $100 to be paid on the day the women get the vote.

GET $1000 QUICKLY.

Other contributions of lesser amounts came rapidly from all parts of the hall, and it was in a very short time that the $1,000 mark had been reached.

Among the other speakers were: State Auditor Frank Pope, Mrs. Theresa Crowley, Henry Abrahams, who pledged the support of organized labor, and J. P. S. Mahoney of Lawrence.

Caronia On Way Here After Strike Delay

LIVERPOOL, May 2.—At 4 o'clock, after delay caused by a strike of the shore gangs and the necessity of obtaining a fresh crew the liner Caronia sailed, carrying the tail end of the trans-Atlantic procession of Americans who have been wintering in Europe. Among the passengers were: Justin H. McCarthy, who is hurrying to Boston to be present at the premiere production there of his play, "Charlemagne"; J. Mathews, European representative of the Bethlehem Steel Company; Mrs. A. P. Bigelow, Mrs. E. P. Hammond, Marshall N. Jarvis, R. and Lady Gerald Ryan and Francis Skinner.

"Complexion Secrets Of An Actress"

In a recently issued volume bearing the above title, the author says: "Continuous use of grease paints, rouge and the like, had ruined my complexion. My skin was colorless, wrinkled, coarse and punctured with large pores. In England I heard of the virtues of mercolized wax; my first experience with this marvelous substance convinced me it was more valuable than all cosmetics combined. Now whenever my complexion begins to go wrong I get an ounce of mercolized wax at the nearest drug store, spread on a thin layer of it before retiring, washing it off next morning. The wax, after a few such treatments, seems literally to absorb the worn-out cuticle, when a brighter, healthier, younger-looking skin appears.

"For the wrinkles and enlarged pores I began using a solution of saxolite, one ounce, dissolved in a half-pint of witch hazel. Bathing the face in this every day for awhile soon relieved the condition most wonderfully."—ADVERTISEMENT.

MRS. BERNARD SHAW ENTHUSIASTIC OVER PARADE

WIFE OF FAMOUS PLAYWRIGHT "INSPIRED" AS SHE TRUDGES ALONG WITH MARCHERS IN LINE

Distinguished Englishwoman Declares "This Is the Way to Do Things."

Mrs. Bernard Shaw, wife of the famous writer, and herself a leading suffragist of England, marched in the great suffragist parade yesterday afternoon, probably the most-pointed-out, the most distinguished single figure in the parade.

"This is most inspiring," said the famous English woman, as she marched along.

"This is the way to do it. This parade shows the women of Boston are in earnest."

Mrs. Shaw marched with the Writers, the 63d division in line, undistinguished by any identifying mark. The two features in the parade which aroused her enthusiasm most were the women physicians and Miss Margaret Foley with her giant rose.

This gives women a feeling of solidarity," she said again as the unbroken divisons of women from Brookline and Newton swept by.

Mrs. Shaw has taken part in many English demonstrations for women and has witnessed the militancy of the suffragettes in London if she herself has taken no part in it.

Mrs. Shaw joined the ranks of the marchers, took her place modestly and trudged along through the streets touching elbows with strangers. She refused to accept a seat in one of the vehicles. An automobile brought her to the corner of Berkeley and Beacon streets five minutes before the head of the lines began to move past. When her division came along she fell into line and continued until the parade ended, later walking across the Common to the home of her friends, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Morgan of the Hotel Tudor on Beacon street, with whom she is staying.

"PROUD TO TAKE PART."

"I am proud to take part in the procession," she said smiling. "It was an honor to be asked to march. I want to let Americans as well as the English know what I think of the cause."

Mrs. Shaw was simply dressed in a neat trim gown that permitted her to walk freely and easily.

Following her arrival at the Berkeley street corner, Mrs. Shaw held an impromptu reception before she began marching and smilingly greeted many of the women suffragists, explaining that it was great fun as well as an hoonr to be in the Boston parade.

One woman introduced to her was Mrs. Louis Agassiz Shaw, one of Boston's foremost women political equality leaders.

Mrs. Shaw carried a small flag which she waved often to friendly faces as they passed in the line before she took her own place and followed on behind,

She proved one of the best of the marchers, never faltering and calmly keeping step no matter how disconcerting the cheering that swept and thundered above the heads of the paraders.

She smiled too when hisses from anti-sympathizers greeted her as she marched up Beacon Hill. At the close of the march when the aligment was broken and scattered on the Common, Mrs. Shaw stopped to speak with friends whom she met there, and then picked her way up the walk to The Tudor.

"I am hapy and tired," she admitted as she took a last look at the mass of human beings on the Common.

GUESTS OF MORGANS.

Mrs. Shaw is spending several weeks resting and sightseenig here as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Morgan, whom she met in England. She has taken many automobile tours in and around the city, and is rapidly imbibing American impressions, later probably to be related to her distinguished husband when she leaves for England.

In an interview she said:

"Americans have curious notions of Mr. Shaw. He is an idealist, a great man, yes, but a dreamer, too, of the most wonderful dreams. He is shy, too. He is neither blatent nor the satirical person that so many have pictured him. I wish you knew how serious he is in his beliefs. He has preached and written socialism a long time.

"He is a vegetarian. He hates the slaughter house and the butcher shop. They are horrors to him.

"He enjoys rice and macaroni as much as the epicure would enjoy a roast of mutton."

Keep School Children's Heads Clean

There is always more or less trouble keeping the heads of children free from vermin, especially while attending school. No sensible mother would endanger the eyesight & lives of her children by using liquids or drugs & fine combing pulls the hair out & ruins it.

As a preventive & cure this sanitary, sure remedy, which is recommended by physicians & has been adopted by school & health authorities, should be followed once a week by every mother of children. Wet the hair with water & wash thoroughly with Fitzgerald's Hair Soap, which can be obtained of any druggist. This soap will form a thick medicated lather, which will thoroughly cleanse the hair of all nits, vermin, dandruff, germs & dirt, no matter how bad the case may be, & it will never harm the hair like fine combing & need not be examined by school physicians. It will keep it always clean & healthy, soft & fluffy, prevent its falling out, & promote its healthy growth. Always in a white tin box. A 10-cent box is sufficient for several months' use. Mothers should save this notice. Do not take a substitute, as Fitzgerald Soap Co., Collingwood, [illegible], will send you this soap by mail on receipt of price. —ADVERTISEMENT.

Suffragists Have Newburyport 'Tea'

NEWBURYPORT, May 2—One hundred and fifty persons assembled at the "suffragist tea" given here this afternoon at the Educator Bakery, the building in which William Lloyd Garrison sought refuge in 1860 when atticked for his utterances against slavery.

The tea was held in observance of the National Women's Suffrage Day. The management of the building treated the gathering to a generous supply of "suffragist biscuits."

The guests included Miss Clarbone Catlin of Baltimoer, Mrs. Hazen Albertson of West Newbury, and Miss Adriana Pidoni of California.

WORCESTER, May 2.—Worcester's suffrage parade failed to materialize today. One hundred women agreed to meet on the Common and march, but only fifteen showed up and the parade was abandoned.

PARADE PROVES 'ANTI' TRIUMPH, SAY LEADERS

Mrs. Henry Preston White and Others Point to Throng Who Wore No Colors.

After seeing the big suffrage parade from the balcony of Mrs. William Lowell Putnam's Beacon street home, the anti-suffrage leaders declared the parade had been a complete failure, and that the day had been a triumph, not for the suffragists, but for the "antis." They announced that they had disposed of 100,000 red roses to be worn by men and women opposed to suffrage.

Said Mrs. Henry Preston White:

"The demonstration against suffrage surpassed anything the anti-suffragists could have hoped for.

"It was unfortunate that the supply of roses ran out so quickly—a few hours sufficing for the disposal of thousands of them—but none of us had anticipated how great the demand would be. We were swept off our feet.

"On the sidewalks of the city yesterday there were two wearers of red roses to one with the suffrage yellow. It was a most astonishing revelation that the majority of women are actively opposed to the suffrage.

"But the great point of the whole day were the vast numbers of women who wore no color. They greatly outnumbered the wearers of both roses and jonquils added together.

"And no one who has any regard for facts can assert that these women, who wore no colors, want the vote. Their lack of interest in the whole matter could not be more apparent. And in this again they proved the claims of those opposed to the extension of suffrage.

THE "IMPRESSIVE" PARADE.

"The suffragists have shouted for that parade long, using every possible means to line up anyone who had the slightest leanings, or who didn't care. There can be no doubt whatever but that everyone who could be prevailed upon to wear their colors did wear them yesterday.

"Those who wore no colors may just as surely be counted against suffrage as the enrolled members of the anti-suffrage organization.

"When these facts are considered—facts the most hysterical suffragists cannot controvert—what becomes of that 'impressive' parade?

"Is it more impressive that 10,000 women—if there were that many—should march with all the excitement and chance to show themselves off—a thing that a certain type of woman loves—or that a hundred thousand women on the sidewalks should look on in solid disapproval?"

Mrs. John Balch of Milton, who had done a great deal of the work connected with the "War of the Roses," said:

"It was indeed significant to see the vast number of roses upon the streets, notwithstanding the fact that the anti-suffragists had given strict orders that the sale of roses should stop at just 4 o'clock—one hour before the starting of the parade, that the suffragists might not accuse us of attempting to ruin their day."

Mrs. C. N. Gulicq, of the rose committee, said: "The parade was received, in the main, in sullen silence; in places the paraders were actually laughed at. The parade was a failure in every way, and we feel very sorry for those who marched. However, it was their own fault, and was only to be expected."

Yesterday the anti-suffrage organization, of which Mrs. James M. Codman is the head, issued the following statement regarding the suffrage parade:

"MISLEADING PAGEANTRY."

"Remember today the 1,700,000 women of Massachusetts who are not tramping in street parades! Do not let martial music and pretentious spectacle make you think we women want to vote!

"Most women think the woman suffrage parades socially unwholesome, symbolically false and politically useless. They are not the genuine signs of public opinion, but the artificial advertisements of a minority.

"Under the pressure of organizers anxious to make a good showing many of the marchers have stifled in their hearts their natural and womanly repugnance to such publicity and others, especially the younger have been swept into the ranks by an appeal to the love of mere excitement.

"The dignity of womanhood, especially in men's eyes, is lowered by the spectacle. The pageantry is more misleading than the unfairest political cartoon, it is ghastly mockery of the real truth about woman's place in American civilization.

"In its political effect, the street parades will be just as unsuccessful as were the parades in Michigan, Ohio, Wisconsin and Washington."

Parade Was Most Impressive, Says Governor Walsh

At the conclusion of the suffrage parade yesterday Governor Walsh said:

The parade was most impressive and the leaders of the movement for Woman Suffrage, who organized and planned it, are to be congratulated.

As was to have been expected, it was a demonstration by dignified and intelligent women, sincerely believing in a great principle.

No citizen could witness this outpouring of earnest and high-minded women without appreciating the great importance of the movement.

This day's event will serve to attract more thought and deeper consideration to the vital problem of Equal Suffrage.

Ambulances Are Kept Busy During Suffrage Parade

So great was the crush of spectators to see the Suffrage parade yesterday at a dozen different points along the route that men and women fainted and the police and hospital ambulances were kept on a continuous rush.

Police Captain Sullivan of Station 2, in whose district the jam seemed greatest, declared that not only had he never seen such a parade crowd before, but that the number of accidents marked a record for a demonstration in Boston. As to the size of the crowd, he said:

"Five hundred thousand people would be putting it mildly. We had 40,000 alone at Washington and School streets. We had 900 policemen on duty, and they did their work well. The record number of accidents was simply due to the tremendous jam at various points."

At Tremont and School streets there was another 40,000. Once on Washington street, near School, the throng became so dense that the rope strung along by the police was parted and the great crowd overflowed into the street among the marchers. It was several minutes before the police could clear the middle of the street.

Several times in front of City Hall where Mayor Curley, with Mrs. Curley at his side, viewed the parade, the crowd pressed into the street.

The following list of accidents was given out by the police:

LILY ZOLL, twenty-four, Brookline, fainting spell, stricken at Tremont and School streets.

SAMUEL SPECTER, No. 106 Middle street, Boston. Stricken in front of Bellevue Hotel. Ambulance made a record trip of fourteen minutes in answering this trip from Haymarket Relief Station and returning.

JOHN COOK, thirty-one, of No. 237 Benton street, East Boston. Stricken at Tremont and Beacon streets with fainting spell. Received abrasions on knee and was slightly crushed by crowd. Taken to Relief Hospital.

ALFRED DE LEVEE, No. 148 Salem strett, Boston. Stricken at Park and Beacon streets while watching parade.

GLADYS BATES of No. 20 Adam street, Waltham, overcome at School and Washington streets.

BERTHA MOULTON, Lynn, fainted.

Boy Shot in Eye With an Air Rifle

Chinese Laundrymen Arrested; Accident, Say Police.

While playing in a yard near his home yesterday afternoon, James Kempton, ten years old, of No. 9 Atherton street, was shot in the right eye by a bullet from an air rifle.

After ecelving treatment the police were notified and late last night arrested George Jot, thirty-nine, and Joe Hoy, thirty, two Chinese laundrymen living at No. 3079 Washington street, on a charge of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

The police say that the two men were shooting at a tin can and the bullet, missing their target, hit the boy. The wound is not dangerous.

PISTOL SHOT ENDS DUEL WITH KNIVES

Policeman in South End Opens Fire and Arrests Colored Duelists.

Two colored men fought a duel with pocket knives in Middlesex street, and Patrolman William Trainor of the Dedham street station ended hostilities with a pistol shot, but he had to use his gun to protect himself.

Both duelists were arrested. They gave the names of Thomas Lope, twenty-eight, and Peter Perry, twenty-one. They live at No. 20 Bradford street. Lope got a few cuts, but Perry was so badly slashed on the head, face and arms that he had to be treated at the City Hospital before he was locked up.

Perry dropped to the sidewalk after Patrolman Trainor fired in the air as a warning, and the crowd that filled the street thought he had been shot. But Trainor's bullet imbedded itself in the ceiling of the doorway into which he ran to capture the assailants.

The men are charged with mutual assault and with attacking Patrolman Trainor with dangerous weapons. They will be in court Monday.

ANTI-TRUST BILL FAVORED IN HOUSE

Measure Reported by Committee Is Similar to That Presented in Senate.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—The House Judiciary Committee today reported favorably the administration anti-trust bill which is similar to that presented in the Senate. The bill makes the guilt of those violating the Sherman law personal; prohibits interlocking directorates which restrain competition; forbids holding companies where they operate in restraint of trade; prohbits discrimination with the intent to destroy or wrongfully injure a competitor.

The bill embodies the Clayton anti-contempt and anti-injunction bill, which passed the House last Congress. It also provides that nothing in the bill shall restrain fraternal, labor, consumers', and agricultural organizations from carrying out their legitimate objects.

Hold Husband as Wife Faints in Court

Declaring that if her husband were released by the court, her life would be in danger, Mrs. Henry W. Pearse of Medford fainted when Judge Bruce announced that he would let her husband go on his personal recognizance. Judge Bruce changed the conditions and ordered the husband to furnish $200 bonds, in default of which he was committed for a hearing Thursday on the charge of assault and battery.

BOY LEPER TO HAVE WIRELESS OUTFIT SOON

Fund Contributed by Readers of the American Sufficient to Buy Apparatus.

Archie Thomas, the leper boy of Penikese Island in Buzzard's Bay, is about to experience the realization of his fondest dreams.

The AMERICAN is gratified to be able to report today not only the completion of the Archie Thomas Wireless fund, but the acceptance of a wireless outfit for young Mr. Thomas by the members of the State Board of Charity.

All who gave so generously to the fund may see the wireless instruments on exhibition in a few days in the windows of the AMERICAN'S Summer street business office. H. R. Cheetham, a construction engineer employed by the Marconi Company, will go to Penikese either tomorrow or Tuesday to study the ground and make a plan of the requirements.

Governor Walsh yesterday wrote to young Thomas, promising to visit him at Penikese some day and congratulating him on the success of the wireless fund.

Archie Thomas, who has spent some six or seven years on Penikese—fourteen miles across Buzzards Bay from New Bedford—is a plucky young man. Naturally studious, his retirement to Penikese seems only to have increased his ambitions. He soon mastered the typewriter. Then he took up telegraphy.

Aided by the kindly superintendent of the colony, Dr. Frank H. Parker, Archie set up a wireless outfit by means of which he has been able to "take" messages of all sorts.

How the lepers day by day have learned of the goings-on in the great world they have left, was told by Archie some time ago to Bernard Pease, one of his classmates in the high school back at Upton:

> Dear Bernard (wrote the leper boy), I suppose you are surprised to receive a letter from me. . . . Please consider yours truly a first-class telegraph, or wireless operator.
>
> I have got my station running in great shape. I get all the news long before you do. I get news from Cape Cod. There is a big wireless station there that gives out news every night at 10 o'clock to all ships at sea, so I copy it at the same time, and get it all for nothing.

The AMERICAN called attention to Archie's wants and proposed the purchase of high-powered, high-class, up-to-date equipment.

READERS of the AMERICAN have done the rest.

Yesterday, the contributions totalled $390. The members of the Archie Thomas Fund Committee declare that this will be enough.

The AMERICAN takes this occasion to say that the success of the movement is due largely to this committee, which is made up of Inspector Henry C. Gawler, the United States government expert in charge of the enforcement of wireless regulations in New England; Mrs. Edgar M. Young, of Winchester, president of the Junior Charity Club of Boston and vicinity; Thomas M. Stevens, superintendent of the Eastern Division of the Marconi Company of America; Dr. Greenleaf Whittier Packard, radio engineer of the Wireless Specialty Apparatus Company, and Melville Eastham, inventor, of the Clapp-Eastham Company of Cambridge.

Archie Thomas is a brave boy and a good boy because he has a brave and good mother.

When, back there at Upton in Worcester County the doctors shook their heads and told the story of Archie's affliction, and when it was determined that Archie must spend the rest of his life on Penikese, the widowed mother startled Upton by declaring:

"Then I shall go to Penikese with him!"

They did everything to make Mrs. Thomas see that she was "choosing a living death."

"Wherever my son must go," she said, "his mother will go with him."

So, mother and son are now on Penikese, there to remain until Death comes to liberate them. Unless, that is, some man of medicine makes a discovery as notable as that of the wireless telegraph.

Mrs. Thomas for some time has been carried on the State rolls at $200 a year, as "nurse and helper."

Mother: Nurse and helper to the afflicted.

Son: The instrumentality through which the Islanders are placed in communication with the world outside.

Happy readers of the AMERICAN, who have given aid and comfort to this mother and her son!

Thief Stole Suit, Then Cooked a Meal

Chelsea Man Says They Were His Sunday Clothes, Too.

Thomas McLaughlin of No. 11 Michael place, Chelsea, was the maddest man in Chelsea last night. McLaughlin went home and found that a thief had preceded him.

"He stole my Sunday suit and sweater and rubber boots and then had the nerve to toast bread and eat a meal of beans and ham before he left," McLaughlin told Lieutenant Hewey of the Chelsea police station.

"He also smashed the window, and say," he added, "that was my only Sunday suit. It cost $15."

Back Now at War on Army of Spiders

Out in the Back Bay the Little Miss Muffet who sits on a tuffet is sure to be driven away by a spider these days.

An army of big gray spiders has invaded Back Bay, and the house holders have declared war on the arachnids. James H. E. Merton, the Clarendon street insectologist, asks [illegible] to destroy the spiders' eggs.

GOVERNOR WALSH'S LETTER TO ARCHIE THOMAS

May 1, 1914.

Mr. Archie Thomas, Penikese Island, Massachusetts:

My Dear Young Man—I have read with great interest of your pluck and courage under trying circumstances, and I am writing to let you know how your splendid optimism has inspired me. I hope other Massachusetts boys, more favored than yourself in a material sense, may take courage from your example and strive to make the most of their opportunities.

It has greatly pleased me to observe that kind-hearted men and women have interested themselves in the matter of providing you with a wireless telegraph equipment of "grown-up" dimensions. I hope sincerely that their gift may be of the utmost benefit to you. I know that you will use it wisely and carefully, at all times observing the federal regulations.

Some day I am coming to Penikese to see if there is anything I can do for you down there. I hope to advise you "via wireless" of my coming. Sincerely,

DAVID I. WALSH,
Governor.

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the opening of the flower bulbs comes the order for a general "cleaning up" in Boston, beginning May 3d. For where to buy paint and other requisites consult the "Want Ad" columns of the Boston AMERICAN tomorrow.

RUSH REINFORCEMENTS ASHORE FROM U. S. FLEET

SHOTS FOLLOW THE MEXICANS' DEMAND FOR SURRENDER OF VERA CRUZ MARINE OUTPOSTS

Water Works of City is Made Object of Second Mexican Advance—Fear for Supply.

By CHARLES MICHELSON.

VERA CRUZ, May 2. — Reports were received here this afternoon that the Mexican Federal soldiers had attacked the American outposts and that fighting was continuing intermittently.

Reinforcements were rushed to the front both from the fleet and the land forces.

Five hundred Mexicans, cavalry and infantry, commanded by a lieutenant, sent a messenger to the American outposts under a flag of truce at 9 o'clock this morning and demanded the surrender of Major Russell and his force of Third Regiment marines.

This absurd demand was, of course, rejected. The Mexicans then gave the Americans ten minutes to lay down their arms.

Russell's reply was:

"Get out. Don't waste any 10 minutes."

Before American reinforcements arrived the Mexicans fired four shots and Russell fired a single rifle shot in exchange. The machine guns were not used.

The Mexicans retreated before Russell's support came up.

An "S. O. S." call was sent to Admiral Badger, who replied:

"Reinforcements sent immediately from the fleet and also land forces."

Captain Mustin, from the battleship Mississippi, flew to the front in a Curtis biplane.

Part of Food Blockade.

The attack at the front was made while another detachment of the Mexicans started for the Tejar water works which gives the city its supply.

The reservoir and pumping station is situated twelve miles south of this city and five miles inland. The Mexicans expected to either destroy the pipes or make the water unfit for use, as part of their plan to establish a food blockade from the interior.

This is being done in the hope of starving out the Americans. Three companies of marines under Major Butler are intrenched at the water works. A special train was sent from here with orders to pick up 800 soldiers and marines to reinforce the men at the source of the water supply.

The march of the Mexicans toward the reservoir was reported here by army scouts early today. They said the Mexican detachment consisted of several hundred men. Aviators Ballinger and Lamont have started in aeroplanes for the scene.

Steam launches from the battleship Arkansas are running along the coast to protect the aviators from the sharpshooters. The aviators were ordered to hug the coast line until directly opposite the water works. At 1 o'clock, Vera Cruz time, Captain Thorne of General Funston's staff said:

"General Funston has just received word that a trainload of infantry has reached Major Russell's camp to support him and Russell advises that the Federals have retreated.

"General Funston has ordered other troops to go to the assistance of Russell, but learning that the Federals had retreated he cancelled the orders. Not one shot has been fired by the men under his command, Major Butler informs us."

It was evident that word of the incident had reached Federal headquarters in some form because shortly before 150 Rurales appeared near Tejar. They evidently expected to find a battle in progress, but being disappointed they drew away. On the theory that the demand of the surrender of the water works was authorized by General Maas, a general warning has been sent to all posts to be prepared.

Soldiers on the Alert.

It is deemed probable that the incident was the result of the overzealousness of a young Federal officer, but the immediate action of our forces showed their wonderful state of preparedness for possibilities. Before the time allowed by the lieutenant's ultimatum had expired aeroplanes were up, the train was started and notice was sent to the troops along the line that it would pick them up—this all by wireless.

The aeroplanes were back before General Funston had released the report of the incident. They circled the scene of threatened hostilities, but saw no signs of any considerable number of Federals.

ANTI-HUERTA MOVE TEMPORARILY QUIET

MEXICO CITY, May 2.—The city was quiet today and the movement against Huerta seems to have subsided temporarily. Excitement over the ousting of Senor Rojas from the Cabinet has abated and it is announced that Rojas may be sent to Washington as a special envoy.

In the meantime, Estava Ruiz, who resigned simultaneously with Rojas, remains as head of the Foreign Relations Department until his resignation has been accepted.

The War Department announces that Dr. Ryan, who was released from prison Zacatecas yesterday by order of Huerta, is on his way to Mexico City and should arrive here late this evening.

The reported confiscation by the government of the Teziutlan Copper Company's properties in Puebla and the Angangueo mines, leased by the Guggenheims, was authoritatively denied today. The Tribune this evening features Secretary Bryan's declarations regarding Mexico and quotes him as saying the International conflict will be settled in fifteen days.

The paper announces that the armistice has resulted in the suspension of war preparations and the closing of recruiting offices in New York. A lengthy article in the same paper tels of arevolt of Vila's troops when they received the news of the landing of American marines of Vera Cruz.

SAY AMERICANS WERE JAILED

All Americans with the Villa army were imprisoned according to the article and Calixtco Contreras is quoted as declaring his intention of killing any American mixing in the revolution or interfering in Mexican affairs in any way. The paper declares there are more than 1,000 in Villa's army, many wearing American army uniforms and carrying United States army rifles and other United States army equipment.

The populace of the Northern States is represented as having been aroused to great fury against Americans, trains passing through this territory being greeted with shouts of "Viva Mexico!" "Death to the Yankees!"

PRAISES VELASCO.

The TRBUNA adds that the fall of Torreon was followed by fourteen days' continuous fighting, General Velasco, the Federal commander being beaten only by the exhaustion of his ammunition. The DIARIO OFFICIAL today prints an exact from a Bilbao paper, EUZKADI saying:

"All efforts of the powerful North American nation to impose in Mexico a democratic government and realize an impossible ideal in a country not yet properly prepared to practice democracy, have amounted for the present to nothing more than the taking possession of the oil bearing belt, the richest and most extensive ever known."

The Diario Official says, "the altruism of North America is laughable, likewise the good will of President Wilson, because the State and the President care little or nothing for the progress or downfall of Mexico, merely seeking to exploit the country's immense wealth. The Standard Oil Company is declared to be responsible for fomenting the revolution and enlisting the American government in a hypocritical and transparent attempt to democratize a country incapable of democracy through lack of instruction and morals and for ethnical and historic reasons is only fitted for military dictatorship. The revolutionary contest," continues the paper, "implies Mexico's struggle against all-absorbing trusts, wherefore it is known throughout Europe and America as the 'petroleum war.'"

NEW CRISIS IS NOW AT HAND IN MEDIATION

Both Mexican Factions Protest Bryan's Frequent Presence; Huerta Still Quibbles.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—The A. B. C. mediators late today delivered to this government and sent to Generals Huerta and Carranza requests that representatives be appointed to confer with the mediators for the purpose of exchanging peace proposals.

The mediators are considering the adjournment of their sessions to Havana in order to surround their deliberations with an appearance of absolute impartiality. There has been considerble criticism among the representatives of both Mexican factions, because of the frequent presence of Secretary Bryan at the meetings of the mediators. Definite word has been received here that Carranza will refuse to enter an armistice and that he has ordered his army to move on Tampico immediately.

"Every effort is being made to induce Carranza to consider an armistice, but there is little likelihood of success in those efforts."

This message was sent by a number of Europeon embassies to their governments today. It indicates that a new crisis had been reached in the efforts at mediation. Diplomats generally were of the opinion that the next 48 hours will determine whether the negotiations to bring peace in Mexico shall be carried on with hope of success or with acknowledged failure.

RAJAS DISMISSED.

The news from Mexico City that Huerta had summarily dismissed his Minister of Foreign Affairs, Senor Portillo y Rojas, and that he had declared that he consented to an armistice with the United States only on the condition that the Constitutionalists "do not attack the troops of he Republic during the armistice," put a damper on the optomism of the mediators. The status of the situation as outlined today by diplomats close to the mediators was as follows:

1.—Huerta is quibbling again, sparring for time and hoping that the advance of the Constitutionalists toward Mexico City will be stopped by an armistice.

2.—Carranza is standing pat, refusing to enter an armistice, and seeking to use the mediators for the advancement of his own interests.

3.—The mediators, non-plussed by Carranza's refusal of an armistice, are floundering among a number of plans.

4.—Secretary Bryan is trying to aid the mediators and welcoming every delay that gives Americans time to get out of Mexico.

BAY STATE PEOPLE AMONG THE REFUGEES TODAY AT VERA CRUZ

VERA CRUZ, May 2.—Sixty-eight refugees, mostly Spanish, arrived from Mexico City today. Among the Americans on the train were C. L. Baker, Wollaston, Mass.; John C. Brenan, Washington; James Coleman, St. Louis; Howard Jones, Boston; Dr. Sidney U. L. Felder, wife and two children, of New York. Baker will sail for home on the German ship Ypiranga.

GARRISON SEES WILSON AFTER RECEIVING REPORT

are guarding the pumping station. The Mexican commander with the flag of truce demanded the surrender, within ten minutes, of the station but had not attacked. The two forces are now facing each otherd. Have given stringent orders not to fire the first shot. About 500 Mexicans are in sight. Reinforcements are going out. Fear an attempt may be made to cut the pipe line tonight.

The second telegram, filed in Vera Cruz at 7:10, read:

"Mexican troops at pumping station, no longer in sight. Before leaving they fired a few shots. Reinforcements sent out, are returning except two companies left at the pumping station and one company to guard a railway bridge."

REBELS TO USE NEUTRAL ZONE AS THEIR WAR BASE

CHIHUAHUA, May 2.—The refusal of General Venustiano Carranza to make the foreign-owned property around Tampico a neutral zone was explained by Constitutionalists officers her today. They said that if the plan were put into effect the Constitutionalists would not have any base for their attack upon the city as practically all the territory in the oil fields outside Tampico belongs to foreigners.

A statement to this effect has been sent to George C. Carothers, special agent of the State Department at El Paso, and to British Consul H. C. Myles. The statement added that General Carranza, in his official position of first chief of the Constitutionalists army would afford every necessary protection to Americans and other foreigners in the campaign against Tampico.

General Carranza said he wired instruction to General Luis Caballero and General Pablo Gonzales, who are operating in the Tampico district, to protect foreigners and exercise all possible caution to prevent the destruction of foreign property.

MEXICANS SEE U. S. MARTIAL GLORY IN EL PASO PARADE

By EDWARD H. HAMILTON.

EL PASO, Texas, May 2.—The grape juice war seems to have resolved itself into a picnic and a parade.

Special Envoy Carothers is going to join Special Envoy Pesquiera and some of the Constitutionalist junta in a jaunt to see Carranza at Chihuahua.

They go today with the women of their household and may fare on with Don Bombastes when he moves his capital to Monterey, while the men may view the fighting at Saltillo and Tampico from some safe eminence.

And General Perching is going to parade his 6,000 men through the streets of El Paso swords clanking, banners waving and the desert sun gleaming on barrel and bayonet. And that is why I say the grape juice war has become a picnic and a parade.

Meanwhile American property in Mexico is being given over to loot and destruction, and when the owners appeal to friend Bryan they are insultingly told that they are trying to bring on war to benefit their own

BOSTON REFUGEES AT PLYMOUTH, ON CORDAGE STEAMSHIP

PLYMOUTH, May 2. — Arthur P. Rice and his wife of Boston arrived here tonight on the steamer Olaf as the first American refugees coming direct from Mexico to New England. The steamer left Progeso Yucatan about a week ago with 6,000 bales of sisal for the Plymouth Cordage Company. Mr. Rice is the Mexican agent for the Boston firm of Henry W. Peabody & Co., of No. 70 Kilby street.

Much interest prevailed in the arrival of the steamer following a report today that she was bringing forty refugees as passengers. The Olaf reached the outer harbor early tonight. She will dock tomorrow following inspection by the immigration officials.

Your Grandmother's Remedy for Purifying the Blood

And Renovating the System in the Springtime

Ask for Sulpherb Tablets.

What was grandmother's unexcelled remedy? Haven't you heard of it? Yes, you have! It was sulphur, cream of tartar and molasses. The main trouble with it was its nauseous taste.

A modern method puts the cream of tartar and sulphur into a sugar-coated tablet and mixes them with herbs, roots, etc., making a wonderful tonic blood purifier and system cleanser.

Just try Sulpherb Tablets (not sulphur tablets), but Sulpherb—remember the name—and get the tablets in sealed tubes at 50c per tube.

Grown-up people and children who don't feel well, who are constipated or sluggish, or who have pimples, boils, carbuncles, ulcers and the like, can soon rid the system of these impurities by taking this good old-fashioned remedy in modern form. Their action satisfies or money is refunded by the Prescription Product Company, Dayton, Ohio. A free trial sent to any address. Buy of any well-stocked druggis

Let the Public Pay Tribute to the Heroes of Vera Cruz

The Boston American will support with the full power of publicity the proposed public patriotic tributes to the American blue jackets and marines who died for the honor of their country at Vera Cruz.

It is proposed that public demonstrations of pride be held in all the home cities of the Vera Cruz heroes.

The Hearst newspaper in Chicago, the Chicago American, has organized a great public funeral for Samuel Meisenberg, one of the first young Americans killed at Vera Cruz.

GARRISON GUARDS AGAINST ANOTHER KERR

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Following the abrupt removal of Robert J. Kerr as civil governor of Vera Cruz and the dissolution of Admiral Fletcher's civil government organization, the War Department has made public a letter from Secretary of War Garrison to General Funston which is intended to guide him against further appointments of officials "not in harmony with the administration."

Secretary Garrison's letter says:

"I have just had a conference with the President about the administration of civil municipal functions at Vera Cruz. Wherever the Mexican official refuses to continue to exercise his functions, we think it unwise to place an American civilian in charge and want a military government carried on by officers of the army and the marine corps under your command.

"I have read the proposed regulations for establishment of a civil government dated April 26. It would be simpler and better to take the system which was in vogue when the Mexicans ran the city and to put army officers at the head of the various department bureaus and other official positions with duties similar to those that had been performed under the Mexican administration.

BETTER FOR ALL.

This will appeal to the citizens because it will be what they have always been accustomed to. It will be better for us than to have American citizens who happen to be on the ground injected into a military administration. Please acquaint yourself as soon as possible with the method of administration of the city government; that is of all the civil governments under your jurisdiction and act thereafter in accordance with instructions above set forth.

Follow as nearly as you can the method pursued by us in the Philippine Islands, when the military took over the civil functions from Spain. You may state as your reason for taking this course that the territory within your jurisdiction is now, and while it remains under your jurisdiction, will be subject to military government.

COPY PHILIPPINE RULE.

I desire to have persons directly responsible to my orders and subject to my jurisdiction in all places. It would be helpful to you to obtain a copy, if possible, of the general orders issued at the time of the military government in the Philippines. Inquire among your officers to see if any of them have copies. I would suggest you would inquire among all your officers to learn which of them took any part in the military government in the Philippines or Cuba, as the experience will be very useful to you in this connection.

In my administration of military government in the Philippines it was found convenient to utilize services of naval officers in certain possessions in the civil government and the office of captain of the port was always filled by a naval officer, the Admiral readily furnishing officers at the suggestion of the commanding general. You should avail yourself of this opportunity.

DEMAND RFLEASE OF AMERICAN DYING IN MEXICAN DUNGEON

NOGALES, Ariz., May 2.—On information brought here by refugees that James Byington, an American imprisoned since August 9, 1913, at Cumpas, Sonora, Mex., without a trial, was slowly dying of neglect, another protest was sent today to the constitutionalist authorities at Cumpus demanding his immeditte release.

According to Americans who have been aroused by what they describe as cruelties inflicted on Byington, former protests against his long imprisonment without a trial have been received with jeers by the constitutionalist chiefs.

Byington, who is an old man and a native of Boise, Idaho, is said to be losing his mind. The latest representations to the Mexican authorities state that it apparently is not the intention to give him a trial and ask that he be set at liberty.

The charge against Byington involves a shipment of ore from a mining claim.

The refugees report that the American is confined in a dark adobe cell, surrounded by filth and vermin, clad in rags and half starved.

VILLA LEAVES FOR TORREON TO DIRECT TROOP MOVEMENT

CHICHUAHUA, May 2.—General Villa will leave sometime tonight for Torreon to superintend the movement of troops from Torreon to Mnterey, and thence to Tampic and Saltillo.

RING'S OFFER OF SERVICE COSTS HIM $75 EVERY MONTH

PORTSMOUTH, May 2.—James A. Ring of Quincy, retired paymaster of the United States Navy, was one of the first men in New England to offer his services to the Navy Department when trouble started in Mexico, and he was accepted. He was summoned to the Portsmouth yard Friday and put to work as purchasing pay officer, which means that he gets $75 less a month on his return to the service than he was drawing on the retired list with the rank of commander.

But Commander Ring said tonight he didn't care a rap about the money. He is delighted to be "in the ring again," as he expressed it, and is working with all the enthusiasm of an ensign. He succeeded Pay Director E. D. Ryan recently ordered to New Orleans.

BOMB THROWN INTO RIO GRANDE FROM THE MEXICAN SIDE

BROWNSVILLE, Texas, May 2.—A bomb thrown from the Mexican side exploded in the middle of the Rio Grande near the pumping plant at San Benito last night. No damage was done to the head gates, but many dead fish resulted. A company of militia fired several shots.

TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have Bladder Trouble

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive; harmless and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.

ROCKEFELLER HELD DIRECTLY TO BLAME FOR BLOODSHED BY FOSTER OF MINES COMMITTEE

Congressman Produces Correspondence Showing Futile Effort to Settle Strike.

WASHINGTON, May 26.—Bringing squarely up to John D. Rockefeller, Jr., entire responsibility for continued bloodshed and destruction in the Colorado mining district, Chairman Foster of the House Mines and Mining Committee today presented a statement and copies of telegraphic correspondence he had with Rockefeller and his subordinates.

In the statement there was a personal plea to Mr. Rockefeller to accept arbitration of the strike differences for the sake of humanity and in the name of suffering women and children.

This followed the failure of Mr. Rockefeller to reply to Mr. Foster's last telegram of yesterday except through a curt announcement that the telegram had been forwarded to the officers of the oClorado Fuel and Iron Company.

The statement by Mr. Foster is intended to clear the situation as to the work of the committee in its efforts to bring about a settlement of the strike. It shows the unyielding attitude of Mr. Rockefeller in the fight of his company against union labor.

SAY MINERS REFUSE OFFER.

A long telegram supplementing the foregoing is then set out in the correspondence. It was addressed to Mr. Foster by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company by J. F. Wellborn, president, and all the other coal operators. It included a long letter by Governor Ammons, in which he made some suggestions concerning a possible solution of the difficulties between miners and employers. A letter showing that the employers agreed to the Governor's proposals is also included and the statement that the miners refused.

To this Mr. Foster replied, as follows:

May 2, 1914.
To J. F. Welborn, Denver, Colo.:

Supplementary telegram received. I have always understood that the reasons the miners refused to accept the suggestions of settlement of strike ogered by the Governor was because they did not provide a means whereby the miners could present their grievances. William Green, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America, in signed and published statement, says that the question of unionizing the mines is not the issue. Why cannot all other questions now be submitted to arbitration regardless of failure to adujst differences in the past.

F (Signed) OSTER.

Chairman Foster's statement follows:

"In my conference with Mr. Rockefeller at his office in New York I urged upon him the importance of submitting the difference existing between the striking miners and the operators to a fair and neutral board of arbitration, believing that the trouble existing in the State of Colorado could be peacefully settled. I spent the month of February in Colorado at the direction of the House of Representatives investigating conditions.

CAN BE ARBITRATED.

"Mr. Rockefeller has not been there in ten years. I have been over the property and have conferred with and examined men on both sides of the controversy. I understand the issues on both sides. There is nothing in the differences which cannot be settled by arbitration. The demand that the union be recognized has now been withdrawn.

"The great question now confronting the strikers and owners is 'will you agree to submit the matter to adjustment by arbitration?'

"Mr. Rockefeller cannot evade his responsibility. He cannot set forth the excuse that he will not arbitrate the recognition of the union. He can prevent loss of life and property by yielding to arbitration. The great Pennsylvania strike and also the recent West Virginia strike was settled by men on both sides agreeing to abide by the decision of umpires.

"National sentiment and every instinct of humanity demand the prompt settlement of the Colorado strike. Nothing should prevent both strikers and Mr. Rockefeller from placing the case before a neutral board."

COPIES OF DISPATCHES.

Copies of the telegraphic correspondence between Chairman Foster and Mr. Rockefeller and other mine owners follow:

April 29, 1914.
To John D. Rockefeller, Jr.,
New York City.

William Green, secretary and treasurer of the International Mine Workers' Union, makes public statement that mine workers waive any recognition of the union or unionizing camps. Are you willing to enter into negotiations for settlement of strike on that basis and stop the killing of men and women and children? I strongly urge you to do so and believe that the strike can be ended without recognition of the union, and all other differences can be amicably settled. In my judgment it is your duty to do so.

(Signed)
MARTIN D. FOSTER,
Chairman Mines and Mining Committee House of Representatives.

New York, April 30, 1914.
To Dr. M. D. Foster,
Washington, D. C.

Your telegram of last night is received and I am forwarding it to the officers of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company in Denver, who, with the officials of the other mining companies in Colorado are the only ones competent to deal with the question therein referred to.

(Signed)
JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.

'Unionizing Not the Issue,' Says Miner

"Nor is it true, as Mr. Rockefeller says, that the question in contention is the unionizing of the mines. This has not been and is not now the issue."—William E. Green, secretary-treasurer of United Mine Workers of America.

DISAPPOINTED BY REPLY.

Letter B, Rockefeller, Washington, D. C., April 30, 1914, to John D. Rockefeller, Jr.
26 Broadway, New York City.

Your telegram somewhat a disappointment. We were in hopes that you would deem the situation so grave and serious that you would give your personal effort to prevent the further killing of men, women and children and we renew the hope that you will consider and resolve to use your personal influence and authority to this human end."

(signed) M. D. FOSTER.

Denver, Colo., April 30, 1914.
To Hon. D. M. Foster,
House of Representatives,
Washington.

Answering your telegram of last night addressed to Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and referred to Colorado Coal Mine owners for reply. When on April 16, the Governor withdrew all except a small detachment of militia from the field, law and order and quiet prevailed in this State. There were employed by the operators of coal mines more than 10,000 apparently contented. On the morning of April 20, the striking miners in the Ludlow tent colony, two miles from the nearest coal mine placed their women and children in what they considered places of safety and made an armed attack upon the militia encamped nearby. The fight continued throughout the day and several men were killed.

TELLS OF HORROR.

During the battle the tent colony was destroyed by fire. Next day the bodies of two women and eleven children were discovered in a hole under a tent where the strikers had placed them when the attack upon the soldiers was begun. They had all been suffocated. None of these children and no woman was killed by rifle fire, nor did the soldiers know or had any reason to suspect the presence of non-combatants where the strikers had concealed them. On April 23, Lawson, International board member, United Mine Workers of America, and the leader of the strikers, in an interview published throughout the State, asserted that a war of extermination would thenceforth be conducted by the strikers, and Doyle, secretary of the United Mine Workers of America, by wire instructed the officials of local unions to watch for the approach of the militia which had again been ordered back into the field. The meaning and purpose of such language was obvious.

Since that time, the strikers in armed bands varying in numberg from fifty to 100, have attacked the town of Delagua from the hills and killed three men. They have dynamited and burned the buildings and equipment of the Empire Southwestern and Green Canon mine at Aguilar. They have driven men, women and children into the Empire mine and sealed the entrance with explosives. After the declaration of a truce agreed to between the Governor and Hawkins, attorney for the United Mine Workers of America, they drove the postmaster and others from the Sunnyside mine and took possession of it, as well as the Pictou mine.

RECITE LIST OF ATTACKS.

They dynamited the Tipple at the McLaughlin mine, and fired many shots into the buildings at Mailand. They forcibly entered the store, buildings and dwelling houses at the Chandler mine, and kept up a merciless fire from the hills for nearly forty hours, killing one man, and finally took possession of the camp by slipping in a number of men under a white flag. They have burned, dynamited and completely destroyed the McNally mine in Huerfano County, kept up an almost continuous fire from entrenchments for fifty hours upon the Walsen mine, wounded one woman, killed and wounded four men, and killed a surgeon with Red Cross insignia, while attending wounded soldiers on the field.

They viciously attacked the Hecla Mine in Boulder County, killed one and wounded three men and drove all employes and their families to cover for many hours. They attacked the Forbes Mine in Los Animas County with a force of 400 armed men, killed seven miners, including four Japanese, and burned everything in sight, including a stable and thirty-three mules.

In the prosecution of the campaign of extermination, the foregoing are some of the things those men have done during the past few days with the tacit consent, co-operation and under the personal direction and control of officers and paid agents of the United Mine Workers. As before stated, the coal mine operators of this State have now in their employ about 10,000 men who are satisfied with the condition of their employment.

PROMISED PROTECTION

We promised these men protection from personal violence when the strike was called, and the yhave stood loyally by their employers under most trying circumstances, disregarding the dangers and privations incident to the recent armed attacks of the strikers upon them and their homes. With these men we will always treat concerning matters affecting their welfare, but we cannot enter into negotiations of any character with the officers and agents of the United Mine Workers of America who alone are responsible for the reign of disorder and bloodshed which has disgraced this state.

Operators in Despatch Denounce Union and Refuse Arbitration Plea.

Instead of it being our duty to do so, we conceive it rather to be the duty of the officials of the U. M. W. of America, who called the strike, to call it off. They can do so if they see fit, and by doing so they will, within an hour, in a great measure, restore industrial peace and prosperity to this State. In no event will the American people, when fully advised, long permit 1,200 or 1,500 armed strikers to continue their unlawful efforts to prevent 10,000 law-abiding and industrious men from working for whomever and upon such terms as they see fit."

The above telegram is signed by eighteen of the Colorado Fuel Companies:

Telegram dated May 1, 1914, as follows:

URGES ARBITRATION.

J. F. Walbern, president Colorado Fuel & Iron Company, Denver:

Will you kindly tell coal operators that I have read their telegram of yesterday describing recent disturbances. Inform them that I am anxious for an answer, regardless of who is to blame. National sentiment demands a settlement of the controversy. Many causes for discontent are claimed to exist. The deplorable conditions set forth in their telegram should convince them that it is their duty to agree to submit the matter to a fair board of arbitration so as to stop the loss of life and destruction of property on both sides.

(Signed)
MARTIN D. FOSTER, ETC.

TWO ROCKEFELLERS GUARDED; "DISARM" IS ORDER FOR COLORADO

NEW YORK, May 2.—The employment of an armed bodyguard for John D. Rockefeller, Jr., whose life has been threatened by anarchists, and the arrest of "Sweet Marie" Ganz, the anarchist woman who threatened to kill the younger Rockefeller, marked the developments here today in the defiance of New York radicals in sympathy with the coal strikers in Southern Colorado.

At the same time dispatches from Washington told of the issuing of a proclamation by Secretary of War Garrison calling upon all strikers, mine guards and mine owning corporations in the strike district to surrender their arms.

Conditions in Colorado are still critical and a special train of eighteen coaches, carrying two troops of the Eleventh United States Cavalry, is speeding overland from Chattanooga, Tenn., in response to the call for more troops from the strike region.

Miss Ganz was arrested as she was on her way to join the "mourners' patrol" in front of the Standard Oil offices at No. 26 Broadway. At the police station she repeated her statement that "Rockefeller must be wiped off the face of the earth."

From what she said the police planned all the details for a demonstration at John D. Rockefeller's Calvary Baptist Church in West Fifty-seventh street tomorrow. The church is to be guarded by a police squad during the religious services to prevent an invasion by the strike sympathizers.

"Rockefeller had better look out for me," threatened Miss Ganz. "When I get out of here I will lay for him."

It became known this afternoon that guards have been placed at every gate in the high fence which surrounds the Rockefeller estate at Pocantico Hills. Here John D. Rockefeller, Sr., has remained close to his home, and has practically abandoned golf and outdoor life as a result of anarchist threats. He has not been seen out of doors in the past two days.

At Tarrytown today, three detectives took up their duties as personal guards for the younger Rockefeller.

The "mourning pickets" in front of the Standard Oil offices today were headed by Upton Sinclair, who paid a fine yesterday and was released from jail where he was serving a three-day sentence for creating a disturbance during his mourning vigil. Sinclair was accompanied by Pierre Godin, an artist, and Marie Chaloupka, an anarchist. Half a dozen policemen were on hand.

"I am distressed at Miss Ganz's threats," said Sinclair. "What we want to do is to socialize Rockefeller's mind."

The Rockefeller mansion in West Fifty-fourth street is also being patrolled by the radicals.

From Denver, Col., came word that conditions in the coal district remained at high tension, but that Major Holbrook, commanding the Federal troops, was convinced the arrival of more troops would result in peace.

CORONER'S VERDICT BLAMES SOLDIERS FOR LUDLOW HORROR

DENVER, Colo., May 2.—State militiamen or mine guards or both, set fire to the Ludlow tent colony April 20 and burned to death two women and eleven children, after ten men had fallen in a battle between militiamen and strikers. The men who fired the tents with torches, whether soldiers, mine guards or both, were acting under direct orders of Lieutenant Major Patrick J. Hamrock, or Lieutenant K. E. Linderfelt (or both) of the Colorado National Guard.

This was the verdict returned today by the coroner's jury at Trinidad. Some of the witnesses declared that the soldiers walked among women and children who were crawling on the ground and screaming from terror and ruthlessly applied torches to the tents.

NEW RECRUITS WON IN STRIKE AT WAKEFIELD

Fear Action of Woodworkers Will Cripple Heywood Company Plant.

EFFORT FOR PEACE FAILS

The ranks of the strikers at the plant of the Heywood Brothers and Wakefield Company at Wakefield were increased at noon yesterday by sixteen men employed in the wood working department. Some 200 men are employed in this department, and it is expected that more than 100 men will refuse to go to work tomorrow. If this fact occurs it will cripple work in that department.

The business men of the town met with the officials of the company yesterday looking to talk peace, but without any definite results. The committee consisted of Crozier Latimer, president of the Business Men's Association; George H. Taylor, Frank A. Long, Ernest G. Willard, Rev. Austin Rice, Rev. F. J. Halloran and Chairman Forest A. Seavey of the selectmen.

The storekeepers of the town are hard hit as 800 employes of the plant are idle, which has created a big falling off in business.

Joseph J. Ettor, the I. W. W. leader, continues to speak at mass meetings, urging the strikers to use every peaceful effort to persuade the other working employes to join the strike.

A new feature of the strike was brought to light yesterday by Daniel Sullivan, a local labor leader, who declareddeclared he would have the United States postal authorities investigate the opening of his mail by agents of the company a day or two ago. This letter was sent to Sullivan from the West and addressed to 29 Lake street, his home. In some unknown way the letter went to the factory where it was opened and later returned to the post office endorsed with "opened by mistake, H. B. & W. Co."

Mother Asks Aid in Hunt for Girl

Elizabeth Embree Disappears After Leaving Home for Work.

Elizabeth Embree, eighteen, disappeared Monday from her home at No. 71 Dover street. Her mother, Mrs. Mary Embree, has asked the AMERICAN to aid in the search for her, and has sworn out a warrant for the girl's arrest as a stubborn child.

"The girl was unusually good looking. A graduate of the Girls' High School, she was employed by a downtown firm as stenographer, and left for work as usual Monday morning. Since then she has not been seen by any of her friends.

"A woman in Charlestown says she saw a girl she thinks was Elizabeth," Mrs. Embree said yesterday. "She had only seen Elizabeth's pictures, so she may be wrong. She said this girl had cut her hair short and was wearing short dresses like a little girl."

Capt. Collins' Son Changes His Name

"Misconduct" of Father Reason Given by His Mother.

NEW YORK, May 2.—Justice Davis today granted an order permitting George Fessenden Collins, nine years old, permission to change his name to George Morgan Laimbeer. The application was made by Natalie Schenk Collins Lambeer, the mother.

Mrs. Lambeer was married to Captain Collins, an English officer. She divorced him in 1898, and was awarded the custody of her son, George Fessenden Collins. Subsequently Mrs. Collins married Lambeer, a broker, who was killed last year at a grade crossing on Long Island. Mrs. Lambeer says she desires to change the name of her first child to the name borne by the children of her second marriage, because of the conduct of her first husband.

Couple Overcome by Gas, Husband Dead

A grocery clerk, calling at No. 52 North Milton street, Malden, yesterday, smelt gas, forced the door and discovered the bodies of Gerhardt Rasmussen, 82, and his wife, Maria Rasmussen, 80, natives of Norway. Rasmussen was dead, but the aged woman was revived. The police said the gas had been accidentally turned on. The couple have seven daughters and two sons.

Rich Boston Girl Offers Self as Prize

Pens of Italy Scratch to Win Miss O'Brian

Thousands of Competitors in Novel Contest Started by American Heiress.

By F. J. M'ISAAC.
Member of Boston American Staff Now Traveling in Italy.

ROME, April 23.—A Boston girl named Florence O'Brian has thrown male Italy into a frenzy by announcing that she wants to marry an Italian, and that she has a fortune of $120,000 to share with the lucky man.

Why Florence O'Brian can't content herself with a Boston sweetheart is not explained, but she has put herself up as the prize in a handwriting contest and promises to marry the contestant whose handwriting seems to her to indicate the most desirable qualities.

Miss O'Brian is not in Italy, but in Boston. She is carrying on her matrimonial contest through the columns of an Italian magazine called "Ma Chi E," which is freely translated "For Everybody."

Ma Chi E is published in Naples. Its editor was amazed not long ago to receive a typewritten letter from Boston, signed by Miss O'Brian, making the extraordinary proposition that he assist her in picking out a husband.

He claims to have Miss O'Brian's street and number, but won't reveal it, because somebody might take an unfair advantage of the other contestants.

As Miss O'Brian enclosed her photograph and mentioned that she had a fortune of $120,000, the matter looked pretty good to Ma Chi E, and by making use of the coupon system it might even be a circulation builder.

CREATES SENSATION.

So the letter was published and the conditions of the contest as well as an editorial explanation, which is appended.

Its effect has been sensational. All over Italy young men are practicing handwriting and endeavoring to select a style calculated to appeal to the American heiress. The competition has still five days to run, but delivery wagons are now being used to take the postal cards to the Ma Chi E office.

Italian women are correspondingly indignant and declare that they hope the American "hussy" will pick a husband who will spend her money and beat her.

The exact text of the letter of Miss O'Brian is copied from Ma Chi E. The errors in spelling are due to the Italian compositor setting up English words without knowing what they meant. Here it is:

La mano della signorina americana.

To the Director of the Review "Ma chi e?" Naples.

Dear Sir,

Admirer of your Review, I have decided, if you allow me, to find an husband by means of your paper "Ma chi e?"

This idea wich will appear to you very strange and american is caused by the following considerations:

I was ingaged to an italian journalist very intelligent man who was in Boston many years as Director of an humoristic review, but unfortunately my poor sweet-heart on an excursion by an accident had to give his sowl to Heaven.

The shok was so terrible to me that I promised on the Dear Dead body that, if I had to marry, I would ask the help of an italian humoristic journal and have selected therefore your beautiful Review. I am a studious of Graphology and have a full faith in that science, which gives the real character of the man I decided to get handwritings of many men to be able to select the one whose handwriting corrisponds exsaclely to that of the Dear Lost.

Kindly let me know if you are disposed to help me. I will write again sending you more particulars and if you desire al so my photo.

I am not an ugly girl and I have a property of my own of Dollars 120,000 (Lit. 600,000).

Awaiting your kind reply, I beg to remain Dear sir,

Yours very truly,
MISS FLORENCE O'BRIAN.
Boston, 15-2-1914.

NO APRIL 1 JOKE.

Here is a translation of the editorial statement which accompanies the letter:

Some persons reading the number of the first announcement of the original message from Miss O'Brian, which was April, believed it to be an April fool joke. However, we can affirm positively that this is not so. In proof of the authenticity of the announcement we are printing in this issue the photograph of the comely young woman, whose name we are also able to print because she has fully authorized us to do so, and we are authorized to arrange the details of the competition for her hand.

We reproduce the autograph of her letter with the translation in Italian for those who cannot read English.

Following this first letter has come another in which the lady asks us to collect all the specimens of the handwriting of the would-be suitors and send them in one package to Boston. She was asked by us what fragment of literature or poetry she desired all the contestants to copy, and replied the first three lines of the Divine Comedy of the world poet (these are her words).

We are able, therefore, to set forth as follows the rules for the contest for the hand of this Boston heiress.

RULES.

1—Copy upon a postal card the first three lines of Dante's Inferno, and do not fail to paste upon the card the coupon we print on page 105.

2—Remember that these are absolutely necessary conditions, the verses on the post card and the coupon.

3—Do not alter your ordinary handwriting, as that might defeat the intention of the test.

4—Mail the cards before April 25 to this office.

5—It is permitted to use a nom de plume, but we must publish your own name in case of success.

6—Married people are prayed not to compete, since this will simply cause unnecessary clerical work.

7—Miss Florence O'Brian has declared that she will yield her hand to whomever she discovers to have a handwriting most like that of her deceased fiance.

We shall publish the number of contestants and whatever communications come from Miss O'Brian from now on.

Now we shall announce our sensational news. Miss O'Brian has assured us that in the month of June or July she will come to Italy to see the chief cities and to make the acquaintance of her intended.

And now to work, oh, anxious bachelors, and good fortune attend you.

MISS FLORENCE O'BRIAN.

LONDON OBSERVER NOW ADMITS HOME RULE IS CERTAIN

Conservative Paper Tells Opponents of Irish Bill That Game Is Up.

LONDON, May 2.—The conservative OBSERVER, whose opinions frequently prove to be the tail which wags the Conservative dog, today frankly though unwittingly tells opponents of the Home Rule Bill that the game of bluff is up and that they had better hasten to accept the terms the government is willing to offer Ulster.

"By deed or default of the Unionist leaders themselves in passing the army annual bill last week and surrendering at a pinch their best power to compel immediate dissolution, Home Rule for all Ireland outside Ulster is inevitable. Nothing can prevent the Home Rule bill being put on the statute books. The measure will probably leave the House of Commons in a fortnight for the third time. The peers have no longer any control of it whatever and are quite unlikely to accept any responsibility ofr it passing the second reading. The bill then can no longer be prevented from reaching the statute books as it stands, by anything opposition in either house can do.

The only thing the Unionist party can now do is face once for all the necessity of settlement of consent upon the basis of the greed amending act, to pass concurrently with the Home Rule bill, and make the amending ate as satisfactory as possible to Ulster, and as favorable as possible to the future welfare of Ireland, and to the general interest of the United Kingdom and empire.

NORDICA'S CONDITION IS WORSE

Famous New England Opera Singer Believed Nearing End in Java.

ALL HOPE NOW GIVEN UP

BATAVIA, Java, May 2.—Madame Nordica, the famous grand opera star, is still in very grave condition. Despite a slight rally early in the day. She is failing gradually and the doctors give no hope of recovery.

Scores of friends in Boston and many relatives and old folks up at Farmington, Me., who have boasted that they knew Lillian Nordica when she was a girl, are anxious to hear from Batavia, Java, where the singer has been critically ill for a month.

Last Thursday came word that physicians had given up hope. Friday she rallied a little, but again last night her condition was reported grave.

Lillian Nordica—who was born Lillian Norton, of a substantial old Maine family, in 1858—was a unique figure in the operatic world. Her simplicity, kindliness and comfortable Americanism never wore away beneath her European associations. Her friends tell how on one occasion as she left the stage she saw a young girl whose part it was to sing an aria behind the scenes.

The girl was making a brave effort, but was faltering. Nordica stepped to her side, gave the girl's elbow a friendly pinch, caught the note from her lips and lifted her own voice in the song. The girl fell silent, and the prima donna finished the aria alone.

FELL AT BUNKER HILL.

The great singer won her place by the most amazing toil. Her family in Maine was not wealthy. One of her ancestors, Captain Johua Norton, fell at Bunker Hill. Her grandfather was "Camp-meeting" John Allen, a famous evangelist seventy years ago. The girl's voice was so obviously of remarkable strength and sweet tone that she at length persuaded her parents to help her train it.

When she was fifteen, she came to Boston. Her mother was with her. The girl studied at the New England Conservatory of Music under John O'Neil. At the same time she was working in a down-town store and every cent of her earnings went to pay for her music.

The girl had sung in the choir at Farmington and her ambitions extended only a little beyond that choir and concert work at first. When she was eighteen years old, she graduated from the conservatory with honors—and little else. Her money was gone.

Lillian Norton sought and found a place with a traveling tableaux company. She received $5 a night for singing. Presently her work attracted attention. A concert company offered her a good contract. She accepted it and began concert work in the Eastern cities.

All this time the girl was learning and she had begun to dream of study abroad and of the opera stage. Her concert work enabled her to save money and when nineteen, she went to Europe, singing classical selections in concert work there.

This led her to Milan, where she undertook to study under San Giovanni. When twenty-two years old she made her debut at Brescia in "Traviata."

ADVANCE WAS STEADY.

That was in 1880. Thereafter, the same persistent work and the same determination to rise brought her steadily to the front rank of opera singers.

The Italian tongue could not compass her plain, New England name, so Lillian Norton became "Giglia Nordica," and this in turn reverted to Lillian Nordica. Thus she has been known ever since. She married Frederick Gower when she was twenty-three. He attempted to cross the English channel in a balloon and was lost. Her second husband was a young German, Zoltan Doehme, and finally, in 1909, she and George Washington Young were married in London. Young is a New Jersey millionaire, prominent in politics.

Mme. Nordica has a repertoire of forty operas and enjoys the distinction of being one of three American divas who sing Isolde. The others are Gadski and Fremstad.

She is a suffragist—believes the turkey trot and the modern dances will turn out all right in the end, and has a delightful home at Ardsley Park, near Tarrytown. In 1911 she visited her old home at Farmington, and sang "Home, Sweet Home" at a town concert so that every hearer broke into tears. In 1912 she sang at the Portland Festival. Her friends in Boston include Mrs. Jack Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Chase, Mrs. J. A. Cook, Ralph L. Flanders, and others.

STRICKEN IN BOSTON.

In February, 1912, she had a serious attack of illness, which may have been the precursor of her present illness. She was stricken at the Hotel Lenox, and singing engagements were cancelled. It was rumored she had suffered a paralytic stroke.

She recovered, however, and fourteen months ago started through Canada for a singing tour of the world. Crossing the continent, singing by the way, she sailed from Vancouver for Australia. At Sidney and Melbourne she was enthusiastically received.

In January last the Dutch steamer Tasman, with the singer aboard, went ashore in the Gulf of Papua. There was alarm for a time, but the vessel was dragged free by a Japanese collier. The diva wirelessed the news of her safety. Then she was reported critically ill from pneumonia as the result of exposure at the time of the ship's grounding.

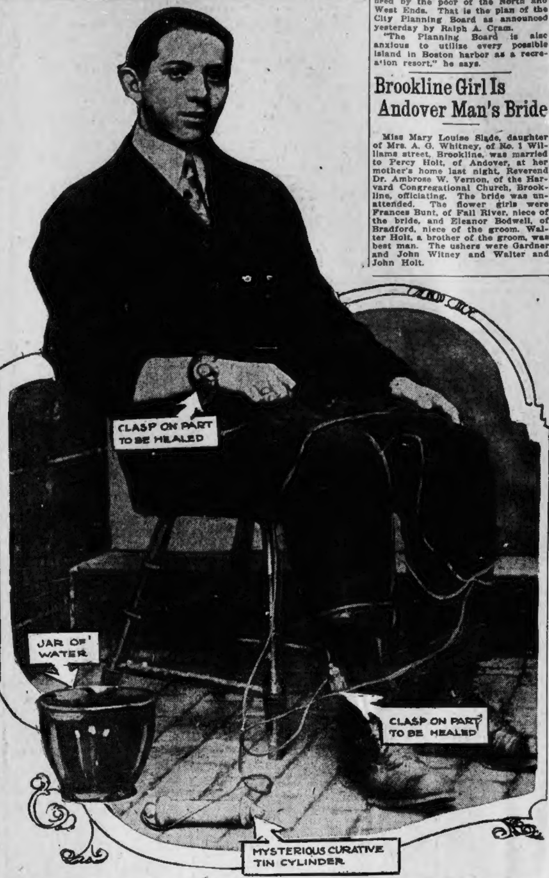
Seize 'Love Machine' as Humbug

◆◆◆

Was Claimed to Cure Heartache

"LOVE MACHINE" AND HOW TREATMENT IS TAKEN.



CLASP ON PART TO BE HEALED
JAR OF WATER
CLASP ON PART TO BE HEALED
MYSTERIOUS CURATIVE TIN CYLINDER

The picture shows an AMERICAN reporter going through the love-cure machine test.

If your love is unrequited,
If to philtres you have turned;
If your aching heart is blighted
Where once the light of Cupid burned—
Then why not try the love-machine.
—Lovelorn Lines.

Ever try the love-machine to cure that curse of an aching heart?

There IS such a thing as a love-machine, and if it lived up to its name—why, there'd be no more divorces, or shattered romances or tearing of the heart strings. It would turn love's despair into love's desire.

Sure thing—IF the machine effected its love-cure. But the police and the doctors say it doesn't do any such thing.

The police say it's a huge humbug. Down at the Hanover street station they've got one of the love-restorers. And the police tried it on a reporter, and the reporter said it wasn't what it was cracked up to be. And then the police gave out this recipe for making the Cupid-concoction:

Take—
One tin can.
One gold fish bowl filled with water.
Two long insulated copper wires.
One belt of perforated cotton batting.
Two rubber garters.

Place the can in the bowl and cover with water.

Attach wires to can and to cotton batting. Connect wires with one garter placed around the wrist and one placed around the ankle.

Then lie down. If you sleep, so much the better.

When you wake—well, those germs of your lovesickness should have passed out of your body through the wires into the tin can, where they die a terrible death.

That's your love-machine. The police say they found one down in the North End and have evidence that others have been in use—not always to cure love, but a long list of other physical and mental troubles ranging from St. Vitus Dance to cholera. And the police thought so little of the cure-all mechanism that on next Tuesday they're going to carry the machine into the Municipal Court as evidence against a couple of men they have accused of practicing medicine without a license.

The two men are A. Marcelle and R. Natal—styled "professors" on the door of their office at No. 283 Hanover street. The police claim their machine is none other than the "Oxpather" which has been exposed and branded as a rank fraud by medical men. And yet, according to the authorities, folk there have been who have been gullible enough to believe the best of the "Oxpather"—so much so that some paid as high as $50 for the privilege of having the wires connected up between their waistlines, ankles and wrists and the mysterious germ-killing cylinder.

How the "cures" are affected is a great big mystery that the Oxypathers have never explained. One theory the police have about the "cures" is that the rubber garters tickle the germs, which then flee down the wires to the can in the bowl. It is possible that the germs, struggling for room, heroically elbow their way out of the can only to meet with a miserable alternative of either drowning or being devoured by tiny wriggly creatures in the water, the police say.

Following many complaints by North End folk, Sergeant Thomas W. O'Donnell was assigned to investigate. He applied in a disguise for treatment and went under the "Oxypather" cure. Then he arrested both "professors."

Cured His RUPTURE

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 102 Marcellus Avenue, Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

up in the New Haven scandal that there is no chance of their finding a loophole," said a member of the Commission. "By his relentless prosecution, he has made it possible to bring to book some of the greatest financiers of the present age."

It is admitted here that when Mellen takes the stand he will implicate some of the biggest names known to the world of finance.

"Some of the men who have already testified in this case will be surprised to learn that the commission knows more about their doings than they were willing to admit," said a high official of the commission today, "and as a result of disclosures about to be made, it will not be unlikely that charges of perjury will figure in this case. If the men are convicted of perjury, it will mean seven years in the penitentiary at hard labor."

EXPRESS KEEN REGRET.

Three letters were received at the commission today from men who were closely associated with President Mellen and with "Diamond Jim." Brady and others, who know the inside workings of the great railroad system. In these letters, the men whose names will be divulged expressed their keen regret for their part in the New Haven's tangled affairs and plead for a chance to turn State's evidence.

"Counsel or Folk said tonight:

"The Commission is assured that Mr. Mellen is ready to appear and testify in good faith concerning the New Haven matters; that is all I care to say at the present time."

Walter F. Reed, who represented the Charles W. Morse interests (the Metropolitan Steamship Company) before the Interstate Commerce Commission which si holding the New Haven inquiry, today told how J. P. Morgan upset the first plans for the purchase of the Metropolitan by the New Haven.

Morgan's interference, Reed said, was based on the fact that Morse's friends made the Ice King president of the new company while he was in the Tombs.

"I met Mellen in New York," said Reed, "in the Fall of 1909, and we discussed the understanding that had been reached for reorganizing the Metropolitan Steamship Company. He said he was to have $1,500,000 of the stock of the new company. This was one-half of the proposed stock. In return he was to withdraw his three fast steamships which had been put on in competition with ours in 1908. He was to name three of the directors and the interests I represented were to name four.

AT RECEIVERS' SALE.

"In October of that year the Metropolitan Steamship Company's assets were sold at a receiver's sale and I was directed to go to Augusta, Me., and organize a new company. Mr. Morse was elected president, John McKinnon vice-president, Campbell Carrington treasurer, Mr. Mellen was made one of the directors.

"On my way back, I was overtaken by a message from Mellen stating that his name must be dropped from the board of directors and all mention of it suppressed, because 'Mr. Morgan is raging around.'

"Mr. Mellen said that since Morse had been put in the Tombs Morgan was violent at the proposal that Morse be made president of the company. He said Morse must be eliminated.

"The Metropolitan steamship lines 'died abornin.' The assets bought at the receiver's sale never were turned over it. They became the property of the Metropolitan Steamship Company of New Jersey. Mellen always denied to me that he knew anything of the purchase of these assets by the Metropolitan of New Jersey. But he gave me to understand that E. D. Robbins, then chief counsel for the New Haven was the key to the situation."

Let your sore, swollen, sweaty feet spread out in a bath of "TIZ."

"Just couldn't wait to take my hat off!"

Just take your shoes off and then put those weary, shoe-crinkled, aching, burning, corn-pestered, bunion-tortured feet of yours in a "TIZ" bath. Your toes will wriggle with joy; they'll look up at you and almost talk and then they'll take another dive in that "TIZ" bath.

When your feet feel like lumps of lead—all tired out—just try "TIZ." It's grand—it's glorious. Your feet will dance with joy; also you will find all pain gone from corns, callouses and bunions.

There's nothing like "TIZ." It's the only remedy that draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up your feet and cause foot torture.

Get a 25-cent box of "TIZ" at any drug or department store—don't wait. Ah! how glad your feet get; how comfortable your shoes feel. You can wear shoes a size smaller if you desire.

ELEVATOR KILLS BACK BAY MAID

Car Drops Six Floors; Firemen Cut Away Floor to Remove Body.

Miss Mary Halloran, twenty-five, a domestic employed at No. 364 Commonwealth avenue, was instantly killed last night when the cable of an elevator in which she was riding broke, causing the elevator to drop six floors.

Miss Halloran, accompanied by Nellie Shea, another domestic, attempted to ride to the top of the building in a two-foot freight elevator. When at the sixth floor, the cable parted, and in decending, Miss Halloran was caught between the elevator and the first floor. Her screams attracted the attention of the engineer, who summoned a doctor. A detail of firemen from Ladder 15 cut away the flooring and removed the body. Medical Examiner Magrath said death was caused by a broken neck.

Convict in State Prison a Suicide

"Barney Frank" Writes He Is Tired of Living; Uses Rope.

"I've been forsaken by God and man and I'm tired of living," wrote a convict in his cell at the Charlestown prison about daylight yesterday. Then addressing the lines "To My Relatives," he hanged himself to the door of his cell by twisting a sheet and using it as a rope. He was dead when found.

The prisoner's name is Barney Frank. The police said this might not be his real name, and declared all they knew was that he was twenty-two years old, had been born in Russia and was sentenced in February in the Suffolk Court for breaking and entering. This is a part of Frank's note:

"I beg you to forgive me for what I have done. Since I've been here, no relatives have called to see me. No friends have visited me. I haven't received even a letter from any of them. So I don't want to live any longer."

WINTHROP MAN LEAPS IN NIAGARA

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., May 2.—In an effort to end his life a man claiming to be John Holland, forty years old, of Woodside avenue, Winthrop, Mass., jumped into the upper Niagara River just above Willow Island this afternoon.

Three laborers working nearby on the State Reservation saw the man make the leap and rushed to his aid. The current swept the man into a small raceway and Michael Donovan, one of the trio, succeeded in hooking his clothes with a spike pole. He held him until the others reached him and hauled him out.

Holland was taken to the Memorial Hospital, where he received medical attention, and it was stated he was little the worse for his chilly bath. He is held as a prisoner and will be prosecuted by the officials of the State Reservation.

Holland says he has a sister, Mrs. Sarah Vogel, living in Winthrop. He claimed to be worried about something, but wouldn't tell the Coroner what it was.

Commerce Chamber Plans Spring Gambol

Grape juice diplomacy and orders by the Admiral of the good ship Piffle won't have anything in the nature of surprises on the second Spring Gambol of the Chamber of Commerce at the Copley-Plaza, on the evening of May 13.

Fred L. Brown of "Hennessy" fame is preparing a line of talk that is expected to rank up well with utterances of Admiral Grapejuice, while Fred E. Mann, one of the runners up in the contest for championship of Massachusetts Fat Man's League last season, is getting out a series of stereopticon slides that will demand the strongest kind of lantern to exhibit them. The Glee Club started rehearsals not long ago in the Hotel Bellevue.

Watchman Killed by Trolley Car

An unidentified man employed as a watchman by Snow Bros., contractors, was run over and instantly killed late last night by an inbound Allston car while crossing the tracks of the Boston Elevated at the corner of Boylston and Arlington streets. Motorman Frank C. Manning was held by the police pending an investigation.

SICKLES, DYING, RECEIVES WIFE

NEW YORK, May 2.—For the first time in twenty-nine years, Mrs. Daniel E. Sickles spent a night in the house of her husband, General Sickles, tonight, as he lay in a semi-conscious condition in his home at No. 23 Fifth avenue. The untiring efforts of their son, Stanton, covering a period of six years, were at last successful.

"Everything is in harmony once more," said the son to a reporter. "It's a shame that it should come at this time, when father is about to leave us. While we are grieved at the prospects of his death, we rejoice that the reconciliation came in time."

Miss Eleanor Earle Wilmerding, housekeeper for fifteen years at No. 23 Fifth avenue, the home of the last surviving corps commander of the Union army in the Civil war, was buried on Lincoln's birthday. The taking of her body from the Washington square house, from which she was accused of keeping Mrs. Sickles, was expected to lead to a reconciliation between the grizzled warrior and his wife.

Malden Ministers Mad Over "Ponies"

Liquor Privileges to 18 Express Companies Stir Churchmen.

Malden clergymen do not intend to follow out the Biblical quotation of turning the other cheek to be smitten in the case of the granting of the biggest number of pony express licenses in the city's history just when the ministers believed they had made an impressive and effective campaign.

The ministers intend to fight. Once before there were seventeen pony express licenses granted. Then the number dropped to five and then to none, then it increased to seven, and last year to thirteen. The ministers fought to have but seven granted, threatening to wage a campaign to have none granted at all if more than that number were awarded. When the vote was taken, the aldermen had granted eighteen—and the ministers are some mad.

$250,000 for Memorial.

BURNS IS GRILLED IN THE FRANK CASE

ATLANTA, Ga., May 1.—Detective W. J. Burns was grilled for more than an hour today in regard to his connection with the Frank case by Solicitor-General Hugh Dorsey.

The hearing was set for Monday to allow Burns to leave town for a few days, but was hastily called today.

Burns admitted that he had concluded that Frank was not a pervert, so far as known, and said subsequent interviews had strengthened that impression.

The solicitor brought out the fact that every bit of evidence which has been discovered by Burns or his agents is either now a part of the record or is in the hands of the attorneys for the defence. The solicitor developed that Burns has no further evidence, either physical, documentary or in the form of testimony of witnesses. In answer to a question, Burns stated that he knew the defence has no witnesses whose testimony has not been injected into the case. He secured the admission that Burns has discovered proof of no crime committed by Conley.

PATRONAGE CLUB DRIVES MANY SENATORS TO SUPPORT OF TOLLS REPEAL MEASURE

Fight on Panama Bill Now on in Earnest: Debate May Continue for Weeks.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—The bill to repeal the exemption from canal tolls for American ships engaged in the coastwise trade is now before the Senate. It will remain the unfinished business until the final vote is taken, giving way now and then temporarily to other matters requiring speedier disposition.

A conservative estimate is that the debate will continue for a month. Some Senators are of the opinion that it will be well toward the middle of June before the Senate is ready to pass finally upon this proposition that looks to the reversal of the whole American policy with respect to the canal upon which the country has expended upward of half a billion dollars.

Among the "repealers" is a group of perhaps ten or a dozen Senators who are supporting the President under duress. Only pressure from the White House and other arguments usually potent with those who have patronage to distribute have kept these Senators in line to vote for something in which they do not believe and are willing to admit privately their own constituents will not approve.

FIGHT ONLY BEGUN.

To this group a sudden revival of war activity in Mexico will be hailed with relief. If the situation in Mexico becomes unexpectedly acute and the army gets into action it is probable that the repeal of the canal law will be pushed aside for matters connected with the Mexican situation that will compel immediate and constant attention.

So far as the Senate is concerned, the fight has but just begun against repeal. When the bill came over from the House the President, the Secretary of State and the leaders of the Senate scouted at the idea of hearings and demanded immediate action by the committee. That body, however, took counsel of itself, decided that the people were entitled to be heard, and opened the doors of the committee room to representative men who desired to discuss the question and submit facts for the information of the committee.

The bill passed the House the last day of March. It was reported to the Senate on Thursday of this week, the last day of April. During that month sentiment throughout the country has crystallized against repeal in a manner that has astonished the proponents of the action. It is proposed that while the bill is under discussion in the Senate there shall be abundant manifestations of this public sentiment.

MUST EXPLAIN TO PEOPLE.

The terms of fourteen Democratic Senators expire March 3 next. For the first time these men have to go before the people at a primary, and then seek their return by direct vote of the people.

Democratic Senators who for long years have been accustomed to following their platform declarations, will find it a difficult task to go before their people and explain away their inconsistency with respect to the tariff and currency and the tolls question. Men like Senators Stone, Thomas, Pomerene and Shafroth voted for the tariff bill because, as they stated publicly on the floor, their platform committed them to it, while at the same time they protested against certain items that injured their State.

They squared themselves, however, because their party commanded them. On the tolls question their platform also commanded them, and if they support the repeal program of the President they must explain to their people why they followed their platform in one instance and refused to be guided by it in another.

Blackstone Man Foul Play Victim

WORCESTER, May 2.—The body of Wasil McCaria, a worker in the Millville rubber factory, was found today in a three-foot deep pond on the outskirts of Millville, in the town of Blackstone. The State Police believe he came to his death by foul play, caused by a blow on the back of the neck. An autopsy will be held tomorrow.

McCaria disappeared from home Easter Sunday, April 12.

"My husband never drank to excess. He had no enemies that I know of and he was in the best of spirits when he started out for a walk Easter morning," declared Mrs. McCaria today.

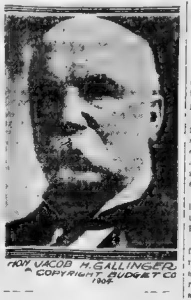
The bruise at the back of the neck indicated that a blow had been struck with a club.

Ethel F. Wallace of Winchester Engaged

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Fairfax Wallace of Winchester announce the engagement of their daughter, Ethel Fairfax Wallace, to George Chapin Proctor of Winchester. Miss Wallace is a native of Philadelphia. She is a descendant on her father's side from General William Brooke of Revolutionary fame and on her mother's side from Colonel Samuel Boyer Davis, who figured in the defence of the Delaware in the War of 1812.

BRYAN VERY MUCH OUT OF PLACE, BUT CANNOT BE OUSTED, SAYS GALLINGER

Senator Fears Country Will Have to Endure Secretary of State.



CONCORD, N. H., May 2.—Secretary Bryan, on account of his relations political and otherwise, with President Wilson, cannot be ousted from the State Department, in the opinion of United States Senator Jacob H. Gallinger, as expressed to the AMERICAN at his home in this city.

"Mr. Bryan would do far better in some other position," said the Senator, "but I fear the country will not be rid of him for the present. He is not built for the State Department. Huerta has outgeneraled him in every instance in their present controversy. Mr. Bryan appears to be in cahoots with Villa, who is a professional murderer, and has made a business of killing men for pay. Bryan is certainly a misfit as Secretary of State."

Senator Gallinger made a tour of Mexico not long ago and is well acquainted with the Mexican character. He refers to President Huerta as a "wily old Indian," and believes the situation across the Rio Grande is serious in the extreme, although the intelligence he has personally received he describes as "chaotic and misty."

POSSIBLE RESULT OF PLANS.

Mediation, he thinks, may be a success and may not. Since the terms for consideration have not been given out, it is impossible to discuss it authoritatively. Senator Gallinger said:

"We do not know yet what conditions President Wilson will impose. If he demands that Huerta get out, and remain out of the election for the presidency, the clever Huerta may reply that he will retire if Wilson will do so, or if this country claims compensation for injury done to our citizens on Mexican soil, Huerta may demand a return for damage caused by our occupation of Vera Cruz. It is safe to say that Huerta, who has got the best of our diplomats so far, will hold his own in the preliminaries connected with mediation proceedings. Through the kindly offices of the governments of the three South American republics that have interested themselves we may escape war by a distribution of the offices at the head of the Mexican government between Huerta and Carranza."

Senator Gallinger is anxious to avoid war, if possible, but if it comes he will stand behind the President, and believes all citizens should do so, regardless of whether they approve of the occupation of Vera Cruz. "The people of Mexico are absolutely incapable of self-government," the Senator declared, "and I think we have enough of such peoples on our hands now without taking on any more."

ALSO OPPOSES REPEAL.

Senator Gallinger's disapproval of the mistakes of the State Department is equal to his hostile feeling in regard to the legislation affecting the Panama Canal Tolls act. He is decidedly against repeal of the exemption clause, having been for years a champion of the American merchant marine.

The proposed amendment by Senator Simmons, to the effect that this country will not yield any treaty rights, was designed in Dr. Gallinger's belief to "make it easier at home" for some Senators whose position on the measure is doubtful. If the administration had been perfectly sure the bill could go through the Senate, Dr. Gallinger thinks the Simmons amendment would not have been suggested. The amendment he regards as a subterfuge.

"It is meaningless," he said, "and I shall not be changed in my attitude on the bill unless it is by an amendment going to the root of the matter, which the Simmons amendment certainly does not. The main issue is a question of treaty rights, and there is absolutely no middle-of-the-road position for an old standpatter like myself, who will stand by his convictions through thick and thin, not through right or wrong, as the President has suggested.

Statesman Declares Huerta Has Outgeneraled Administration at Every Move.

INDICATES WEAKNESS.

"I have supposed that the bill would pass in spite of our opposition, by a small majority, but the introduction of the amendment to make it easier at home for some Senators seems to indicate a weakness somewhere in the repeal forces."

During his visit here Senator Gallinger has been conferring with National Committeeman Frederick W. Estabrook and other G. O. P. leaders.

As yet no one has entered the field for the Republican senatorial nomination, and Gallinger will announce shortly whether he will make the run. He says he is serene on the subject and the field is open. "If I do come out," he adds, "I'll be very actively in the fight and shall expect to win."

Rogers Retired as Rear Admiral

Gets Title Although Failing in Physical Test.

PORTSMOUTH, May 2.—Captain Charles C. Rogers, commandant of the navy yard here, has been retired with the rank of rear admiral. Today he flew his flag and got a salute of thirteen guns in recognition of his rank. He was active rear admiral for exactly four minutes and then went on the retired list. He was appointed from Tennessee. He is sixty-five.

The odd feature of his case was that he took the xemaination for the rank of rear admiral, failed to pass the physical test, but landed the title anyway. Captain Field is acting commandant.

Strike Vote Threat by B. & M. Engineers

Union engineers and firemen on the Boston & Maine last night charged the management with treating them in an "inhuman" manner. They gave notice that unless conditions are improved by Monday they will take a strike vote. The ultimatum committee explained that the men do not seek more pay or a different time. They say the management has broken its agreement by working the engine crews overtime and over-mileage and that trips end away from home without proper accommodations.

TANGO DANCING PASTOR APPROVES OF LATEST STEPS

Rev. Frederick A. Wilmot Says Staid New England Is in Throes of Awakening.

TRUE EXPRESSION OF RYTHM

Rev. Frederick A. Wilmot, the Somerville pastor, who danced the tango with Miss Ruth Wellington of Newton, at an entertainment in Copley Hall for the benefit of the Sunday Commons, yesterday championed the tango, Maxixe and other modern steps, and told how they should be danced. He declared that "poor, repressed and ascetic New England is in the thores of an emotional awakening."

"Like a line storm," said the clergyman, "it was destined to come and the modern dance happens to be one of the methods of its expression. It is proper for the public to be human and enjoy themselves. There are always a few people who will be vulgar if given half a chance and I cannot see why the majority should suffer for them.

"I have been fond of dancing. I was six years under Lilla Viles Wyman's instruction when a boy. I have studied the modern dances with Miss Enid Merril, the capable teacher at the Elizabeth Peabody House.

"I do not desire to pose as a dancing master. The modern dance is a reaction to the minuet style of dancing with a change in rhythm. In some respects it is an entirely new thing.

"The tango and the maxixe are merely waltzing to rhythm. I say 'merely,' for to waltz gracefully is a most difficult thing to do. Smoothness and form are everything. The steps are taken with a slinking, slightly bending, panther-like tread. The foot that goes forward is straight, the bending being in the rear leg, a strain on the muscles which is very tiring to the beginner. The advancing foot runs with the heel first, just the opposite of the waltz, which is all on the toes. The less fuss the dancers make in their movement the better. Every part of the body must respond to the rhythm of the music like the master musician's violin. The good dancer responds so perfectly to musical rhythms that he becomes unconscious of his body.

"Dancers seek to avoid those partners who are unresponsive, since it is hard work to drag them around the hall. Men should be careful in taking the waltz position to keep their shoulders square and at no time watch their feet.

"As Dr. Smith of the Sunday Commons said 'Dancing is the only perfect means of musical expression.' The symphony and the opera are instances of where we pay others to do our music for us, whereas in dancing we express the rhythm for ourselves."

Engineer Webb Tells of Boston's Drydock

Will Be Biggest of Kind in World, Costing $3,000,000.

DeWitt C. Webb, civil engineer of the United States Navy, who was detailed by the government to assist the local directors in connection with the erecting of the large drydock in Boston, was the principal speaker at the twenty-sixth annual banquet of the Norwich University Alumni Association last night at Youngs Hotel.

He emphasized the fact that when the dock is completed it will be the largest of its kind in the world. He said that it will cost about $3,000,000 to build it and it will take about four years before it will be finished.

These officers for the ensuing year were elected: President, C. W. Pierce, '92, first vice president, D. C. Webb, '92, second vice president, C. F. Parker, '96; third vice president, H. N. Gordon, '11; secretary, G. G. Russell, '04; treasurer, E. W. Clark, '92. C. W. Pierce acted as toastmaster.

25 ARE KILLED IN DOMINICAN FIGHT

Federals and Rebels in All Day Battle at Puerto Plata.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Twenty-five insurgents were killed in a battle between federals and revolutionary forces in Puerto Plata, Santo Domingo, today, according to a report sent to the Navy Department by Commander Graham of the gun boat Petrel. The battle had been in progress all day.

Both sides are using field guns and several shots fell within a few yards of the Petrel, which is anchored in the harbor.

The incident was brought to the attention of the combatants. President Bordas on several occasions has bombarded the city and as a result a British subject was wounded by a fragment of a shell.

Graham reports that he has requested Bordas to conform to the rules of international law regarding the giving of notice before bombardment. One of the churches in the city was wrecked by a federal shell.

SAYS SULPHUR DRIVES ECZEMA FROM THE SKIN

Use Like Cold Cream to Instantly Stop Itching and Clear the Skin.

Sulphur, says a renowned dermatologist, just common bold-sulphur made into a thick cream, will soothe and heal the skin when irritated and broken out with Eczema or any form of eruption. The moment it is applied all itching ceases, and after two or three applications the Eczema disappears, leaving the skin clear and smooth.

He tells Eczema sufferers to get from any good pharmacy an ounce of bold-sulphur cream and apply it to the irritated parts the same as you would any cold cream.

For many years common bold-sulphur has occupied a secure position in the practice of dermatology and cutaneous affections by reason of its parasite-destroying property. It is not only parasiticidal, but also antipruritic, antiseptic and remarkably healing in all irritable and inflammatory conditions of the skin. While not always effecting a permanent cure, it never fails to instantly subdue the angry itching and irritation and heal the Eczema right up, and it is often years later before any eruption again appears on the skin. This is published for Walter Luther Dodge Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

RADCLIFFE GIRL IN 'ROMANCE'

To Appear as Ingenue With Doris Keane at the Wilbur.

Once more Professor Baker's class in dramatic literature at Harvard and Radcliffe supplies the drama with something real. Louise Burleigh, a graduate of Radcliffe and one of Professor Baker's pupils, has engaged herself to Doris Keane's company now playing "Romance" at the Wilbur Theatre and will make her first appearance as a [illegible] tomorrow evening. Miss Burleigh graduated from Radcliffe two years ago and then took a [illegible] course at the Franklin Sargent School of Acting in New York. Only a few weeks ago she appeared as Mee-Mee in Lawrence Housman's play "The Chinese Lantern," which was acted by the Idler Club at Radcliffe.

Doris Keane was a guest at the Workshop of the Forty-seven at Harvard last Tuesday, where she first met Miss Burleigh. Knowing that Claiborne Foster, the ingenue of the "Romance" company, was to [illegible], Miss Keane asked Miss Burleigh to try the part. She was given a rehearsal and was engaged on the spot.

COLE WON'T BE MILITIA HEAD

Major Prefers to Remain in Retirement for the Present.

The name of the next Adjutant General on the staff of Governor Walsh probably is NOT Charles H. Cole.

Major Cole told an intimate friend last night that, if he could have his own way about it, he would never again accept an appointive office of any kind whatever.

The major has been a member of the old Boston Police Board. He has also been the Fire Commissioner. He says himself that this will be about all.

It is generally believed that Major Cole's determination will be a great disappointment to Governor Walsh, who yesterday, on General Pearson's retirement, placed Lieutenant Colonel William S. Simmons temporarily in charge of the department.

STUDENTS SEEK IDEAS.

Shea Is Winner in Riding Club Show

Steers "Sapolio" to Victory in the High Jump Class.

Danny Shea, of Brookline, was easily the most popular young man in the Back Bay, last night, when he rode to vcitory the Bay Shore Riding School entry "Sapolio" in the high jump class, at the annual Spring horse show of the Park Riding School, Ipswich street. Young Shea cleared the bar at six feet even without a drop defeating M. F. Murphy's "Reliance" by less than an inch. Shea also captured, during the day, two other firsts and one second ribbon.

Guild Is Guest of Lampoon Editors

Curtis Guild '81, Wadsworth Longfellow, '76, and T. W. Slocum, '90, were speakers last night at the annual dinner of the editors of the Harvard Lampoon, held in the Lampoon building at Cambridge. John T. Wheelwright, '76, brother of the donor of the building, presided. A feature of the gathering was the passing round of a special Lampoon number containing old drawings and jokes "perpetrated" by many of those present.

SUSPECT FOUL PLAY IN DEATH

Body of Man in Pit Identified As an Everett Storekeeper.

The body of the man found in the Coleman pits in Everett on Friday was last night identified as that of Angelo Rapuzio, former keeper of a variety store at the corner of Second and Boulevard streets, Everett. Frank Rapuzio, a son, identified his father and declared that he believed him to have been the victim of foul play.

The police give credence to the theory from the fact that six weeks before Rapuzio disappeared, which was about Christmas time, he was assaulted one evening while returning to his store.

Quincy Firemen Save Powder House

Quick work on the part of the Quincy Fire Department at a brush fire yesterday saved a powder house at Sheeprock pasture, West Quincy, filled with thousands of dollars' worth of explosives, from catching fire and exploding. When quarrymen told the firemen what was in the house they heaved a sigh of relief that the fire was checked in time.

Lily Stuart to Be Bride of Arthur Blackey of Brockton.

BROCKTON, May 2.—Brockton's first tango romance is about to be recorded. Arthur H. Blackey, a high school boy, and Miss Lily D. Stuart, an actress with the Thompson-Woods Stock Company at the Hathaway Theatre, are to be married.

Their engagement was announced tonight at a dinner. The wedding date has not been set.

Miss Stuart plays ingenue parts at the theatre. She is young and pretty and formerly resided in Boston. It was at a high school tango dance that the young people met. Blackey is an excellent tangoer, and it was not long after her first dance with him that she, too, became a devotee of the terpsichorean art.

The announcement came as a surprise in view of their youth.

MAYOR INSPECTS CITY'S PAVING

Curley Orders Repair Work Done on Newbury Street.

Mayor Curley covered much of the city yesterday in an automobile, looking for the places that need immediate improvement in paving. As a result he requested Commissioner of Public Works Rourke to advertise for bids for resurfacing Newbury street, in the Back Bay, with bitulithic or asphalt surface.

The Mayor has also requested the Boston Elevated to rush work in track laying in Norfolk street, Dorchester, that the paving may be started. When oNrfolk street is finished, with its bitulithic roadway and granolithic sidewalks, the street will be one of the best stretches of roadway in the city.

QUIET BRIDAL FOR ELEANOR WILSON ON THURSDAY

Nuptials for President's Youngest Daughter and Secretary McAdoo to Be in Sharp Contrast with the Sayre Wedding

Sisters of Fourteenth White House Bride to Attend Her—Little Sallie McAdoo to Be Flower Girl—Many Presents

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Eleanor Randolph Wilson, the youngest daughter of the President, and William Gibbs McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, will be married at the White House, Thursday, by the Rev. Dr. Sylvester Beach of Princeton, N. J.

The guests are limited to the Vice-President and Mrs. Marshall, the Cabinet and the immediate relatives of the bride and bridegroom. The ceremony is to be a contrast to the elaborate affairs of the two previous White House brides—Mrs. Nicholas Longworth and Mrs. Francis Bowes Sayre.

The bride will wear a white satin gown. She will be attended by her elder sister, Miss Margaret Wilson, as maid of honor. Mrs. Sayre is to be matron of honor, while the bridesmaids are Miss Nona McAdoo, daughter of the bridegroom; Miss Marjorie Brown, Miss Wilson's cousin, and Miss Ruth Hall, her chum. Eleven-year-old Sallie McAdoo is to be flower girl.

After the ceremony there will be a jovial reception and breakfast.

In spite of the small list of invited guests, the wedding presents are already numerous. Prominent among them is the beautiful service of silver and the candelabra given by the members of the House of Representatives. From the diplomatic corps, no member of which was invited, come flowers and good wishes.

DELUGE OF GIFTS.

A deluge of gifts was received at the White House today on the return of Miss Wilson from New York. While the "freak gifts" did not start to come until this week they now fill one of the small rooms in the basement of the White House and include barrels of apples, turnips, popcorn, washing machines, sewing machines, cooking utensils and canned goods.

Among the other gifts are boxes of the latest best sellers, gifts of hand-embroidered handkerchiefs and collars and an untold number of white gloves of every size with the request that the bride wear them at her wedding and return for a keepsake to the giver.

Andrew Carnegie, who gave Miss Jessie Wilson a wedding gift of a dozen solid silver plates, has also remembered Miss Eleanor with a handsome silver piece. The Postmaster-General and Mrs. Burleson, and their two daughters have combined on a handsome Austrian lavalliere, of one immense opal set in an oval frame of old gold studded with pink pearls. The pendant hangs from a three-petaled flower of old gold and pearl centered with two large opals, and is attached to a finely wrought chain of gold and pearls.

It is very likely that Miss Wilson will have two diamond and opal pendants set in platinum for her wedding gift, as it is understood that Secretary McAdoo will present his bride with a corsage piece and pendant of opals and diamonds to match the ring which he gave her as announcement present.

FULL OF LIFE.

Miss Wilson is the fourteenth White House bride and one of the youngest. She is twenty-four years old. Her husband is fifty. She is the youngest and the most sprightly of the three daughters of the President. She is known for her dancing, tennis and riding and for a fine art in diplomacy. She is an adept in handling people.

It has been said that Mrs. Woodrow Wilson opposed the match. She had nothing against Mr. McAdoo, however, except his age and his large family. Mr. McAdoo has been a widower four years.

Mr. McAdoo met his bride-to-be at a dance about a year ago. They are both passionately fond of dancing, and are a graceful couple on the waxed floor. Mr. McAdoo has been dubbed by his friends in jest "Dancing Mac."

Last Summer they played tennis and took long automobile rides together. When the marriage of Miss Jessie Wilson and Mr. Sayre took place last November, there were many guests who realized pretty definitely who the next White House bride would be.

WINNER OF FIRST PRIZE IN FAMOUS WOMEN CONTEST

Miss Stell Dann of Jamaica Plain, whose list and reasons take $35 prize.

Quits Work Under Curley Appointee

Deputy C. H. Webster Out of Market Department.

Charles H. Webster, deputy superintendent of markets under the recent superintendent, George E. McKay, refused to serve under Patrick Graham, Mayor Curley's appointee. He has failed to report for duty, and another man has been appointed in his place, Hugh J. Quinn, former deputy sealer.

Webster drew $1,700 a year. Although he has given no reason for not reporting for work, it is generally supposed by his friends that he considered it disloyal to his old superior. The Civil Service Commission has been asked to approve the provisional appointment of Quinn.

Borah Would Delay Vote on Tolls Bill

Senator Proposes Postponement Until Next December.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Senator Borah of Idaho introduced a resolution in the Senate today providing that the vote on the Panama Canal tolls repeal bill be postponed until after Congress assembles next December.

The resolution recites that elections of an entire House and 32 Senators are to be held in November and that the tolls question might well be submitted to the people for a vote at that time.

It further states that the three political parties and their candidates for President went before the country not long since advocating the exemption from tolls of American coastwise vessels.

Shocked by Phone, Is Awarded $13,000

J. A. McAdams of Exeter Wins Suit in Unusual Case.

EXETER, N. H., May 3.—John A. McAdams has been awarded a verdict of $13,000 in his unusual suit against the New England Telephone Company. McAdams, who was superintendent of the Hampton and Exeter Street Railway, was badly burned and shocked while using a telephone in his office on July 12, 1911, when the telephone wires, which were being repaired, crossed a high tension trolley wire. McAdams was knocked down, and for some time was unconscious. It was not until some time afterward that the real cause of the accident was discovered.

Mrs. Borden Again Files Divorce Suit

Asks No Alimony, but Wants Custody of Daughter.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., May 2.—Mrs. Helen M. Borden, wife of Gail B. Borden, the "condensed milk king," filed a second suit for divorce here today. The suit was based on technical grounds.

Mrs. Borden seeks the custody of her daughter Ramona, who created a sensation in New York last year by disappearing from her school and being found only after a long search No alimony is asked for in the suit filed today. Mrs. Borden lost her first suit.

JAMAICA PLAIN GIRL WINNER OF NAME CONTEST

Stell Dann Takes $35 Prize for List of Six "Most Noted Women."

HELEN KELLER TOPS LISTS

Miss Stell Dann, No. 68 Iffley road, Jamaica Plain, is the winner of the first prize of $35 in the contest: "Who are the world's six most distinguished women?"

The second prize, $25—Mrs. J. H. Gilpin, No. 279 Pine street, Providence, R. I.

The third prize, $15—Edna Louise Meloney, No. 75 Prospect street, Wakefield, Mass.

Fourth prize, $10—Meta J. Underhill, No. 216 State street, Rutland, Vt.

Fifth prize, $5—Mrs. J. L. Flanders, No. 39 Woodward street, South Boston.

Sixth and seventh prizes of $5 each:

John J. Crowley, No. 68 Portland street, Worcester.

Horace G. Hewes, No. 8 Irvington street, Boston.

LIST OF WINNERS.

The winning list is as follows:

Marie Curie
Jane Addams
Sarah Bernhardt
Helen Keller
Emmeline Pankhurst
Ella Wheeler Wilcox

In giving the awards, the reasons for the answers sent and the neatness in preparing them, had much to do with the determining the winners out of more than 1,200 answers received.

The second list, which was a close second to the first list, is as follows:

Helen Gould Sheppard
Marie Curie
Emmeline Pankhurst
Helen Keller
Ella Wheeler Wilcox
Sarah Bernhardt

The one name in New England, which polled the largest number of votes, was Helen Keller. All the answers sent praised her perseverance.

JANE ADDAMS WINS.

Between Jane Addams and Helen Gould Sheppard there was a nip and tuck battle which ended in favor of Jane Addams.

It was thought advisable to give the last two prizes to those who sent in the best reasons for their answers on the second list.

Here are some features of the contest:

More than three-fourths of the answers came from women.

Nearly all of the replies came from the country towns. Large cities had a much smaller proportion.

Many answers had to be rejected on account of insufficient postage, and many came after the close of the contest.

More than six hundred postal cards containing the name of Annie Besant were sent to the wrong office.

ASSISTING EXPOSITION.

The AMERICAN offered $100 in cash awards for the best answers with reasons. The object of the contest was to assist the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Board, which will take the six most distinguished women of the world to San Francisco in 1915, as a feature of the exposition.

The following is an exact copy of the names with reasons which took the first prize.

Madame Marie Curie—The discoverer of radium, and an able scientist. A woman who through her brain and work has developed radio-activity, with its ultimate application to medicine and surgery.

Jane Addams—The founder of Hull House, Chicago. One of the first settlement workers in the country and a friend to those who really need friends.

Helen Keller—Blind, deaf-mute. A writer, an example of what may be accomplished through patience and work in spite of severe physical disability, and an inspiration to those unfortunates with a similar disability.

Sarah Bernhardt—A woman who has done much to develop the art of acting and to ennoble the drama. She has also helped many a poor artist to success.

Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst—The first Militant of the Suffragette movement, an aggressive woman with a purpose, whatever one's personal opinion may be of her methods.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox—A writer of poems which are widely read and enjoyed. She has also gained much fame through her writings in and connection with the Boston AMERICAN.

To my mind these women are famous and distinguished, not because of inherited wealth or of position in society, but because they have accomplished something in science, art, politics or self-growth, through sheer intellectual force, in spite of obstacles from within and without. All these women will leave footprints on the sands of time.

Romance Began at Charity Theatricals

MISS LOUISE CONVERSE, fiancee of Junius Spencer Morgan, Jr., and snapshots of the bridegroom-to-be. The modest heir to millions is hiding his face from the camera man who encountered him yesterday outside the Delphic Club at Harvard.

Mrs. Frederick Shepard Converse of No. 36 Lime street announces the engagement of his daughter Louise to Junius Spencer Morgan, Jr., grandson of the great J. P. Morgan, and the future head of the world famous house of J. P. Morgan & Company.

The engagement, rumored since early last week, but persistently denied by the family, was yesterday affirmed to a reporter of the Sunday AMERICAN by Mrs. Converse.

"Louise and Mr. Morgan are engaged," she said. "We had planned to let the relatives of the two families into the secret before it was made public. You are at liberty to announce that the engagement exists. The notices are being sent out today."

The engagement is considered the most notable of the season

MOTHER A BOSTONIAN.

Added interest to this engagement of a Boston debutante and the son of a Morgan is found in the fact that young Morgan's mother was Jane Norton Grew, also a Boston girl, whom John P. Morgan married in 1890.

Junius Spencer Morgan, Jr., already noted as the possessor of many of his famous grandfather's traits, and with the college acquired sobriquet of "The Silent," promises some day to be as great a world figure as was the late J. P. Morgan Jr. He will probably be the autocrat of $100,000,000.

He is twenty-three years old and deeply in love with his nineteen-year-old finance. Like all young lovers he is looking forward to the day when he will place a ring upon her finger and sail away on the honeymoon trip.

The wedding will be in accordance with the tastes of young Morgan and his fiancee. Both are fond of simplicity. The gowns, gifts and preparations will be in keeping with the great wealth of the bridegroom, yet everything will be carried out with simplicity.

ROMANCE SUSPECTED.

The secret of the romance between the young couple was first suspected about a month and a half ago when Junius Morgan took the part of a coal shoveler and Miss Converse the role of a country maid at a private

CURLEY WOULD NAME HIS BROTHER AS CITY COLLECTOR

Civil Service Board Now Dominated by Him: Strange Contrast With Fitzgerald's Experience. Appointees Rejected Under Ex-Mayor's Regime Now Welcomed by Commission

Sullivan-Curley-Boyle Alliance Holds Reins—Fire Department Order, Lomasney Cummings and Kearns Appointments, and Mayor's Brother for Collector Leave Democrats Breathless

When "Joe" Lomasney was named by Fitzgerald to be a member of the Board of Health, the Lomasney nomination was promptly turned down by the Civil Service Commission.

When the same "Joe" Lomasney was named by Curley, to be a member of the Schoolhouse Commission, the Lomasney appointment promptly received the Civil Service "O. K." Lomasney is now Chairman of the Schoolhouse Commission.

When Matthew Cummings was named by Fitzgerald to be Superintendent of Public Buildings, the appointment was immediately rejected by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. Curley names the same "Matt" Cummings, for a place on the Sinking Fund Commission, and the appointment is confirmed by the Civil Service Board.

What is the meaning of all this? "Joe" Lomasney is the same "Joe" Lomasney in the reign of Curley that he was in the days of Fitzgerald. "Matt" Cummings—isn't "Matt" the same old Matthew?

Men and women in this town, like men and women everywhere else, find a lot to talk about: The affair in Mexico, the troubles in Colorado, the campaign of the suffragists and the objection of the Red Roses; but, by and large, those Bostonians who try to keep in touch with affairs at City Hall and the State House, find nothing so interesting as the great change that has come over the Civil Service Commission

BOYLE AND CURLEY "PALS."

The civil service outfit as at present manned consists of Thomas F. Boyle, chairman; Professor Garrett Droppers of Williamstown, and Elmer E. Curtiss of Hingham.

Boyle is a Boston leather man. Garrett Droppers is a college professor. Curtiss is a Boston lawyer.

"Tom" Boyle is a great little pal of Mayor Curley. Both are closely in touch with John A. Sullivan, the Big Man of the present administration at City Hall. The Boyles and the Curleys and the Sullivans are socially intimate. There is said to be a deal of visiting among the three houses.

Droppers, whose college is ten times nearer Albany than Beacon Hill, comes down only occasionally and, it is said, "takes 'Tom' Boyle's word for it." Elmer Curtiss, Boston attorney, knows a lot of people that John A. Sullivan or Mayor Curley can get to in person or by telephone with a request to "do things." Curtiss is not unknown, for instance, to some mighty big people in [illegible] Illuminating Company.

So that, one way or another, the mighty State Civil Service Board, which was to have had such a powerful check on [illegible] at Boston's City Hall, has [illegible] fallen completely under City Hall dominance.

ILLUSTRATION OF POWER.

How powerful this influence has become is illustrated by the cases of Lomasney and Cummings, unsatisfactory to the Civil Service Board when Fitzgerald named them, "welcome to our city" when they are nominated by Curley.

Even the Lomasney and Cummings cases, however, have not impressed political Boston as the politicians have been made to gasp by the Fire Department order.

At the mere request of Curley, this Civil Service Board, which was to have purified Boston politics, has now solemnly decreed that all members of the Fire Department seeking promotion will be obliged to take their examinations over again. The present list of eligibles is therefore abolished.

Curley asked for this, and Curley, with all the modesty of a Captain Kidd, names as his reason the fact that "politics had crept in."

Politics has not "crept" in. Politics has tramped in in wooden shoes with spikes in them!

Curley has been in office three months. He has named thirty-six men to office. Thirty-five of them have got by with a "Tom" Boyle "O. K." The other man asked to have his name withdrawn

FITZGERALD'S EXPERIENCE.

In the corresponding first three months of Fitzgerald the Mayor named thirty-nine men to office. TEN OF THEM WERE REJECTED BY THE CIVIL SERVICE BOARD.

Fitzgerald never knew what a hostile Civil Service Board was going to do.

Curley knows what "Tom" Boyle is THINKING.

After their confirmation on Friday of William F. Kearns, to be a Schoolhouse Commissioner, the chances are that no Boston Democrat will hereafter be jarred by anything "Tom" Boyle and his associates may negotiate

The indications are that an extraordinary amount of pressure had to be exerted in the Kearns case, for "Bill" didn't get by until the last minute allowed by law

Kearns was a director and a stockholder in the Eastern Expanded Metal Company. While he was so connected his corporation was denounced by John A. Sullivan's "Fin. Com." for collusive bidding on schoolhouse work.

And this is the gentleman whom Curley and the Civil Service Board now thinks clean enough to handle city funds in the building and repair of schoolhouses.

WHAT "FIN. COM." SAID.

Read what John A. Sullivan's "Fin. Com." said about Bill Kearns' Eastern Expanded Metal Company:

> Even charities secured no exemption, and the prices obtained from a hospital, a home for crippled children and the city of Boston were united in one check, which represented the price of collusion on these jobs. The two companies arranged to parcel out the work on many schoolhouses, the Roebling Company taking some, while the Eastern Expanded Metal Company secured the rest.

There are indications in plenty that the Curley administration has secured, in one way or another, the silent acquiescence of the right people—meaning some of the big and some of the powerful people—in this community.

What do YOU think about it?

Is "Bill" Kearns, in view of the Eastern Expanded Metal Company record, YOUR idea of the kind of man to have charge of Boston schoolhouses?

They were saying last night that, emboldened by his success, confident that Sullivan can square anything with the right people, sure of the Good Government outfit and certain of the "Tom" Boyle Civil Service Board, the Mayor is about to name his brother, John, to be City Collector at $5,000 a year. This is the place out of which Curley has forced Colonel Bowdoin S. Parker, about the last Grand Army man in city office.

If John Fitzgerald fired a Grand Army man there would have been a mass meeting of protest in Faneuil Hall. It was Fitzgerald who placed Parker in office.

And if John Fitzgerald had named his brother for office the Good Government outfit and the Civil Service Board would have called out the militia.

The Sullivan-Curley-Boyle tea parties must be pleasant little affairs.

Thomas A. Ward offered to give the city land worth $2,500, but the Board of Education and the City Council couldn't agree on the plan to name the school to be erected on the site for Mr. Ward and so the city isn't going to get the land.

Woodbury Langdon of Portsmouth and New York, donated $10,000 for a swimming pool but the city officials wouldn't appropriate a similar sum so Mr. Langdon decided to keep his $10,000.

Young Morgan, attired in a tight fitting checkered suit and coarse visored cap, was devoted to the pretty Louise in poke bonnet fastened with strings and a big bow under the chin and a low-necked country girl's gown.

They were together, well chaperoned, of course, much of the evening and though they had been introduced before society got its first inkling of what was "in the wind."

Miss Converse is one of the Winters debutantes, having been given her coming out party December 8 at the new home of the Converses on Lime street.

She is fond of out-door sports, belongs to the Vincent Club and the various Back Bay organizations for debutantes. Like her mother, she is devoted to thoroughbred dogs. She is an expert upon the Airedale and Russian poodle stock and has several of these dogs as pets.

The Frederick Converses are among the most noted of Boston's society families. Mr. Converse is famous as the composer of two operas, an oratorio and many other musical compositions. He is a graduate with honors from the Munich Royal School of Music. Mrs. Converse was Emma Cecil Tudor, daughter of Frederick Tudor. She is the sister of Rosamond Tudor Burgess, the artist wife of W. Starling Burgess of Marblehead, the aeroplane manufacturer and yachtsman.

Miss Converse is a blonde with hazel eyes. She is a finished musician, having her father's love for composition and rendition. Her sisters are Charlotte Augusta, Marie, Virginia and Elizabeth. She has one brother, Frederick Shepard, Jr.

The Converses spent the greater part of each vacation season at their country villa in Westwood.

Junius Morgan, Jr., has many friends in Boston, most of his college companions being members of old Boston families. He spent four years at the Groton School before coming to Harvard, where he is now in his senior year. Already he has worked in the New York counting house of the Morgan family, and as soon as he has completed his college course will permanently take up his life's work there.

He is quiet by nature and shuns publicity, just as his grandfather did. Socially he is one of the foremost men at Harvard, being a member of the Delphic Club. He lives in Holworthy Hall, one of the older college yard dormitories. He dines at the Delphic Club instead of at Memorial Hall.

The wedding will probably take place at Westwood. Boston society will probably be well represented.

Ironton, Ohio.—"I am enjoying better health now than I have for twelve years. When I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I could not sit up. I had female troubles and was very nervous. I used the remedies a year and I can do my work and for the last eight months I have worked for other women, too. I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound enough, for I know I never would have been as well if I had not taken it, and I recommend it to suffering women."

Daughter Helped Also.

"I gave it to my daughter when she was thirteen years old. She was in school and was a nervous wreck, and could not sleep nights. Now she looks so healthy that even the doctor speaks of it. You can publish this letter if you like."—Mrs. RENA BOWMAN, 161 S. 10th Street, Ironton, Ohio.

Why will women continue to suffer day in and day out and drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

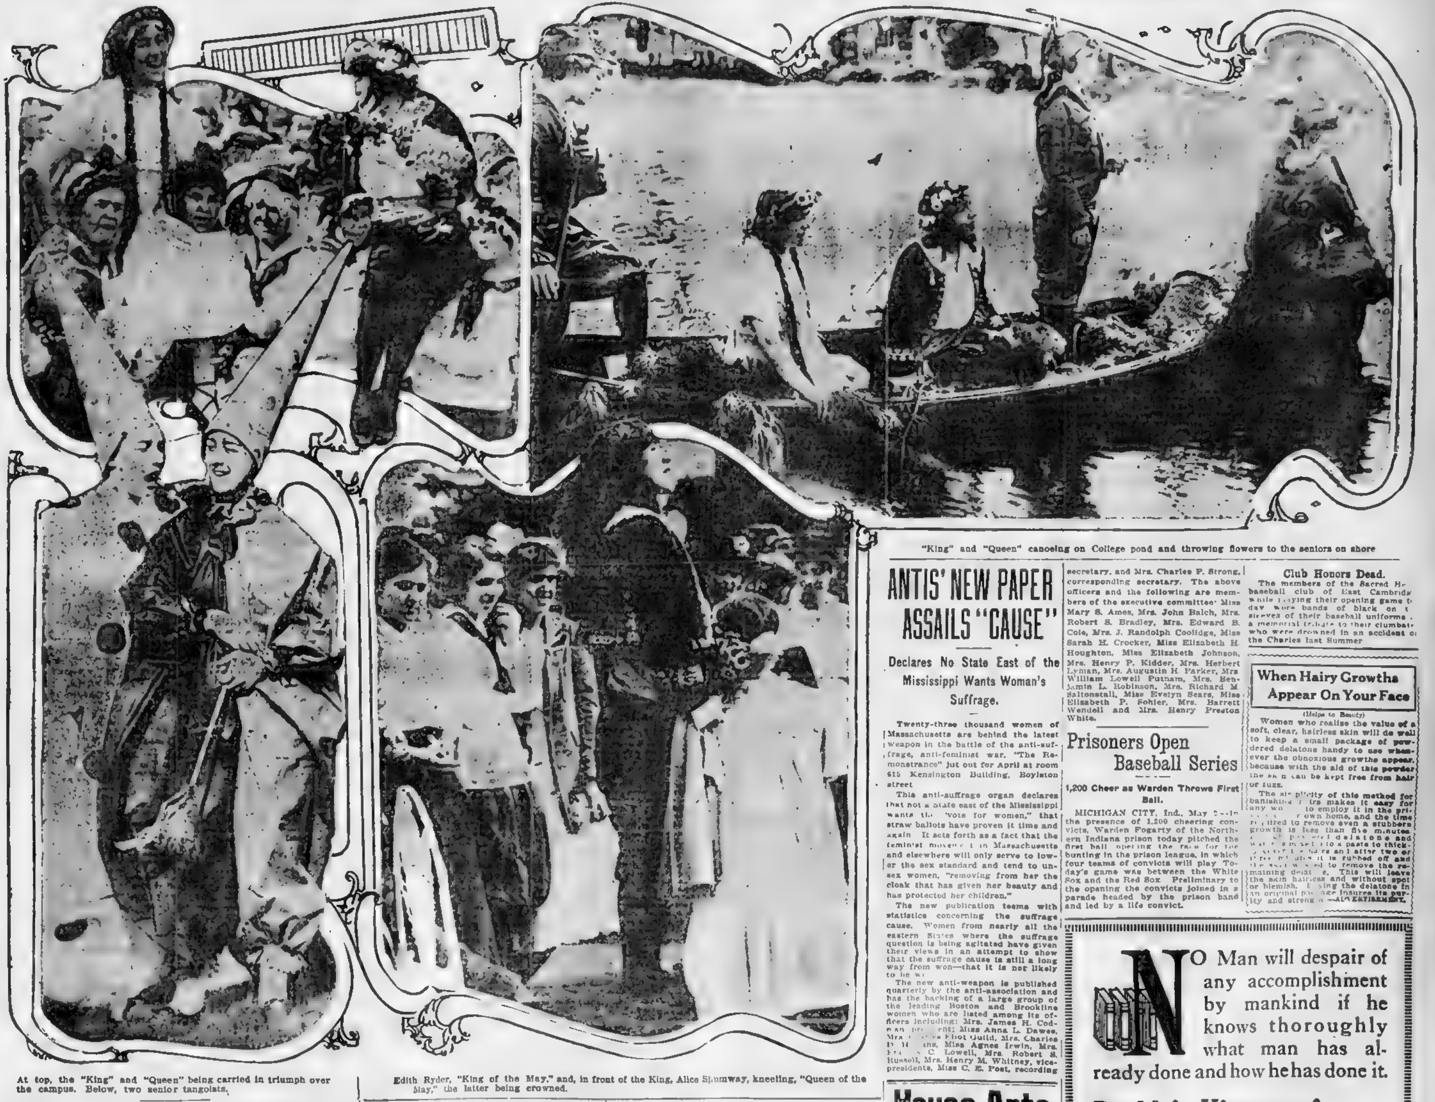
1200 PLUNGE INTO MERRY FROLIC AT WELLESLEY'S MAY DAY FETE

"KING" AND "QUEEN" PROPERLY CROWNED AS GIRLS DANCE AND SING IN JOYOUS TIME



"King" and "Queen" canoeing on College pond and throwing flowers to the seniors on shore

At top, the "King" and "Queen" being carried in triumph over the campus. Below, two senior tangoists.

Edith Ryder, "King of the May," and, in front of the King, Alice Shumway, kneeling, "Queen of the May," the latter being crowned.

Volunteer Is Scrubbed in Place of Statue to Keep Up Old College Custom.

Said "King" Edith to Queen Alice in the royal dialect of Wellesley College late yesterday afternon as they sat enthroned on the college campus:

"Say, but this has been a scrumtiously gorgeous day."

And it was, not only for the "King and Queen of the May"—Yes, they have a King of the May out at Wellesley—but for every one of the 1,200 other girls. Everybody had an uproariously joyous good time, for from dawn until sunset, with a brief period in between for classes, the college gave itself up to its May Day merrymaking on the green. And not the least among the army of joys were the few males permitted to watch the exercises—the campus policeman and a few reporters and photographers.

As one grinning reporter put it:

"Gee, I never had so much fun in my life. It has been one riot of mirth and beauty.

DANCE AND SING.

Features there were galore. They—the Wellesley girls, just simply ignoring the few mere men standing around—did the latest things in the tango line on the greensward while girls took turns playing the hurdy gurdy. (The regular hurdy-gurdy man stood in open-eyed amazement taking it all in). Others sang. Others shouted, other ran here, there and everywhere, and all in all it was a scene of agile grace to be seen only once a year—and at Wellesley.

But the crowning feature of the day came in the afternoon. This was the coronation—a real crowning event. It took place over under the shadows of the walls of College Hall. Here gathered the seniors, patches of sunlight playing upon them from where the setting sun peeked at them through the fire-scorched windows of the burned building.

At the word the seniors formed a double line. Between the rows passed Miss Alice Shumway of Newton Highlands and president of the freshman class, to be made Queen-of-the-May.

After her came the future King-of-the-May, Miss Edith Ryder, president of the seniors. From the throne the royal pair walked to the edge of Longfellow Pond and embarked in a tiny canoe as the girls crowded around the shore—the seniors next to the water, behind them the juniors, and so on.

"GAMBOL ON THE GREEN."

Then the whole throng of "subjects" burst into song as she tossed them tiny May-Day bouquets as a token of her favor.

There was the "Gambol on the Green" in which most everybody joined. Girls there were clad as Mexicans, others in knee skirts and others togged out as boys. Some blew toy balloons—blew them so big that the rubber burst and balloons gave little pop-sounds. Then there was a baseball game and later an impromptu play.

The only bit of seriousness in the fun at the matinee was the red hot election of the president and vice-president of the junior class. Fifteen ballots had to be taken before Miss Caroline Taylor of Montclair, N. J. was announced as the choice for president and Miss Elsie Morton of Granville, N. Y., had been made vice president. Miss Taylor becomes president of the graduating class next year.

VOLUNTEERS FOR SCRUBBING.

The first frolic of the girls came at sunrise when they crowded out from the domitories upon the campus. They start[illegible] with the time-honored [illegible] start. For years "The Backwoodsman" had to stand the brunt of the scrubbing. "He" was a statue that stood on the [illegible] veranda of College Hall. Two years ago "he" mysteriously disappeared.

After that the girls used to "scrub" the statue of Harriet Martineau, which was destroyed in the college fire. So yesterday, lacking a statue, the "scrubbers" tackled Miss Louise Russell of Dorchester, a senior and a willing victim. She volunteered.

Out on the library steps she stood, gun slung over one shoulder, looking like a replica of the [illegible] man." Then came the attack [illegible] seniors with scrubbing and tooth brushes in hand, proceeding to polish the volunteer.

Afterwards came the hoop rolling. The seniors, all in caps and gowns, raced from the front of College Hall to the chapel. It is the campus tradition that the winner of the race is the first to wed.

ANTIS' NEW PAPER ASSAILS "CAUSE"

Declares No State East of the Mississippi Wants Woman's Suffrage.

Twenty-three thousand women of Massachusetts are behind the latest weapon in the battle of the anti-suffrage, anti-feminist war, "The Remonstrance" jut out for April at room 615 Kensington Building, Boylston street.

This anti-suffrage organ declares that not a State east of the Mississippi wants the "vote for women," that straw ballots have proven it time and again. It sets forth as a fact that the feminist movement in Massachusetts and elsewhere will only serve to lower the sex standard and tend to unsex women, "removing from her the cloak that has given her beauty and has protected her children."

The new publication teems with statistics concerning the suffrage cause. Women from nearly all the eastern States where the suffrage question is being agitated have given their views in an attempt to show that the suffrage cause is still a long way from won—that it is not likely to be w[illegible]

The new anti-weapon is published quarterly by the anti-association and has the backing of a large group of the leading Boston and Brookline women who are listed among its officers including: Mrs. James H. Today's game was between the White Sox and the Red Sox. Preliminary to the opening the convicts joined in a parade headed by the prison band and led by a life convict.

When Hairy Growths Appear On Your Face

(Helps to Beauty)

Women who realize the value of a soft, clear, hairless skin will do well to keep a small package of powdered delatone handy to use whenever the obnoxious growths appear, because with the aid of this powder the skin can be kept free from hair or fuzz.

The simplicity of this method for banishing hairs makes it easy for any wo[illegible] to employ it in the pri[illegible] own home, and the time required to remove even a stubborn growth is less than five minutes. [illegible] powdered delatone and wat[illegible] mixed into a paste to thick[illegible] cover the hairs and after two or three minutes it is rubbed off and the skin washed to remove the remaining delatone. This will leave the skin hairless and without spot or blemish. Buying the delatone in an original package insures its purity and strength.—ADVERTISEMENT.

House Ants

There are several species of ants that infest houses.

These little insects are not specially destructive but are very obnoxious, getting into every thing.

The little red ant is particularly troublesome since its small size, it being only about one-sixteenth of an inch [illegible] to [illegible] of almost any receptacle not hermetically sealed.

Furthermore, this little pest is very prolific, and occasionally literally overruns buildings to the serious discomfort of the inhabitants.

This tiny species is probably the most common and the most annoying of all, owing to the difficulty of eradicating it.

The little black ant is about one-quarter of an inch long and normally occurring under stones in yards; also invades the house in considerable numbers.

The pavement ant is about three-eighths of an inch long and is very common along the [illegible] seaboard.

The large black ant is the giant among our household ants. It may be half an inch or more in length, is normally a wood feeder, and has frequently been described as the carpenter ant.

This large species invades buildings particularly in the country, lives in timbers and makes systematic levies upon the food supplies of both kitchen and pantry.

Occasionally this species may become very abundant in a dwelling. Trapping the ants by means of sponges dipped in sweetened water is frequently advised and gives good results if conscientiously carried out.

The most reliable way is to sprinkle "Martin's" Pest Exterminator for Ants about the infested premises. The powders will soon settle the ant question for you. At all drug and department stores for 50c and $1.00; 5c and 10c extra by mail.

BOSTON AMERICAN

TWO GIRL PRIZE WINNERS UPSET VILLA MEDICI

Misses Heuvelman and Boulanger Chang[illegible]g Bohemian Character [illegible] Academy of Arts.

Special Cable to Boston American.

[illegible]—Since the arrival [illegible] Rome of two beautiful art students, winners of the government [illegible] Villa Medici, the historic [illegible] the French Academy of Arts, is undergoing radical changes which worshippers of tradition as well as Charles Bernard, the famous painter and director of the academy, are vainly endeavoring to prevent.

At the same time the male students of the academy are reported as extremely shocked at the turn things are taking within the academy walls and threaten to go on strike unless something is done toward restoring to them the freedom they enjoyed previous to the arrival of Misses Maude Heuvelman and Lili Boulanger.

Miss Boulanger, who has won the music scholarship in open competition with the best young composer of France is the latest arrival. Young men students at Villa Medici maintain that notwithstanding the respect they entertain for their sisters in the art world in general, and for Miss Boulanger in paricular, their admission to the academy should have been gently discouraged in view of what has happened during the brief sojourn in the academy of Miss Heuvelman.

A BLOW TO BOHEMIANISM.

In order fully to understand the [illegible] of the students' grievances against their colleagues of the fair sex, it must be said that while [illegible] life is everywhere on the wane and young painters and sculptors [illegible] affected with incurable [illegible] of the French Academy have kept alive the best traditions of bohemianism such as it was understood in the palmy days of the R[illegible]naissance and, up [illegible] ago in the Latin [illegible].

The arrival two years ago of Miss Heuvelman, who carried off the [illegible] Rome and is regarded as one of Rodin's most promising pupils caused no end of embarrassment to her fellow pensioners in the academy who were suddenly compelled to abandon their [illegible] and easy mode of living out of respect for the new arrival.

The night concerts, with occasional sacrifices to Bacchus, under the [illegible] oaks of the Academy garden were discontinued, and work in the [illegible] in Adamistic garb also became out of the question.

RIVALRY FOR GIRL SCULPTOR.

Th[illegible] climax when [illegible] pensioners lost all interest [illegible] their work in order to [illegible] Heuvelman's scuptural efforts [illegible] stow on her all kinds of [illegible].

It was [illegible] long before a love rivalry [illegible] among the male students [illegible] of them, a young [illegible] Bientaut, whose [illegible] Miss Heuvelman had gently spurned, attempted suicide by jumping from [illegible] ramparts into the [illegible] Pincian gardens. A ros[illegible] saved his life, but the young [illegible] left never to return and complete his four years' course in Rome.

The news that Miss Lili Boulanger had won the music scholarship was received at the Academy with something approaching consternation. The students went into mourning over their lost freedom when Miss Boulanger arrived with her mother and maid and declared she could not dispense with the company of either of them.

BY-LAWS BECOME OBSOLETE.

Director Bernard, backed by the whole body of students, objected that the by-laws of the Academy were most explicit on the subject and forbade the permanency within the Academy walls of any woman not officially connected with it.

Miss [illegible] replied that the by-laws became obsolete the very day the first woman was made eligible to the Rome scholarship and girls allowed to work and sleep in the Academy.

She added that Rome was an extremely [illegible] place for unchaperoned girl students and that inasmuch as she could not get a better chaperone than her mother, she could not see why the latter should not be allowed to share her quarters in the Academy.

According to the latest reports, a compromise has now been effected under which Miss Boulanger's mother and maid will remain in the Academy during the day, but will sleep in a nearby hotel.

Britons Argue Over Claims to Peerage

Learned Counsel Go Back to Days of Robert Bruce.

LONDON, May 2.—The Committee of Privileges of the House of Lords was turned into a historical debating room, when three men claiming to be co-heirs to the barony of Strabolgi in the [illegible] of England, presented their [illegible].

With[illegible] any preliminary, learned counsel engaged in the case went back to the days of Robert the Bruce of Scotland—happily they did not introduce the mythical spider—and told of an ancient Earl of Athol, and great-grandson of Ada, Countess of that ilk, who married John de Strabolgi.

In 1306 this nobleman rebelled against Edward I., joined Robert the Bruce and thereby forfeited his estates both in England and in Scotland.

He fled, or rather tried to flee, the country, but his ship was driven back by a storm on the English coast; he was captured, brought back to London, and convicted of high treason. He was, of course, executed, an his head was exhibited on a spike on London Bridge.

The claimants to the barony are Colonel Alexander Henry Leith of Freefield, Aberdeenshire; Mr. Cuthbert Matthias Kenworthy of London and Dr. Reginald Gervase Alexander, physician to the Bradford and Halifax Infirmary.

King George Changes Court Dates

Royal Receptions Are Set for June 4 and 5, to Discomfiture of Debutantes.

Rumors of Lloyd George Plan to Tax Dinner Parties in New Budget Scheme.

By THE COUNTESS OF WARWICK

Special Cable to the Sunday American.

LONDON, May 2. — Everything points to a short and early season. Court balls are taking place before the usual time and royal visits to industrial centres will tend to dislocate normal arrangements.

The West End looks askance at royal pilgrimages to provincial cities, but the tendency of the times is not to be disregarded and the devotion of the public to royalty must be fostered.

King George has shrewd advisers and purely court functions, though they are brilliant enough, do not hold the place they did in the old days when King Edward, either as ruler or as Prince of Wales, was at the head of social affairs.

Entertainment is likely to suffer, too, from the present state of domestic affairs, and great hostesses, being as a class not only intensely conservative in sympathy, but intensely human, do not care to entertain very lavishly while the Liberal government is in power.

Some say they fear lest Chancellor of the Exchequer David Lloyd George should tax dinner parties and receptions. The coming of a new and unknown "budget" makes them more cautious still and it is rumored that a further increase of death duties and income tax may lead to the closing of several famous houses.

Personally, I am inclined to take all these views with several grains of most fashionable salt. In King Edward's time, American hostesses played a greater part in entertaining than they do today.

Whitelaw Reid's death was a great blow to society. His doors were always open. He and his family had the social gift in its highest development and they contrived to mingle what is most distinguished in London society with what is most interesting.

The present United States Ambassador, although a sterling man, is not in the "Four Hundred" and is a simple democrat; the result is that his house is not the centre of entertainment and the reflex action of this is very evident. At the same time, American hostesses are by no means a negligible quantity.

The Whitelaw Reid tradition is carried on by the late Ambassador's niece, who has brought great wealth to the Granard family and the same applies to the Hon. Mrs. John Ward, formerly Jean Reid, who married Lord Dudley's brother.

She will entertain largely this season at Dudley House, which has, I understand, been completely renovated; in fact the interior is almost rebuilt.

Countess of Warwick.

Lady Paget, daughter of Paran Stevens, the wife of the sturdy general, who has been so prominently in the public eye of late, is another outstanding hostess. So is Lady Craven, who was Miss Bradley Martin but it is uncertain whether she will be so prominent this season owing to the recent death of her uncle, Frederick Townsend Martin.

Another American hostess who is in the front rank is Lady Decies, daughter of George J. Gould. Lady Decies is very popular and only this week entertained largely for the Punchestown races.

The Duchess of Marlborough, who returned to town this week for the season, is very active, but her energies are given to philanthropic rather than social service. Nevertheless, Sunderland House is sure to open its hospitable doors in the cause of social entertainment.

Other charming American hostesses whose names come to me as I write, who readily and gracefully play their part in season and out, are the Duchess of Roxburghe, the Countess of Essex, Lady Lancaster and Lady Cunard.

There are great lamentations over the unexpected announcement that the fourth and fifth courts have been postponed until June 4 and 5. There are very strong and most reasonable complaints that the courts should have been fixed for days in Whitsunday week.

Nothing can be more inconvenient for nearly everyone than to hold such court ceremonials during holidays.

It is a very serious trouble for many families in that the ceremonials, at which nearly all debutantes will appear, are not to take place before June. Meanwhile several important balls, which were fixed for May expressly for the debutantes, will occur before these young ladies have appeared at court.

By the way, the first of June court is to be held on a Thursday for the benefit of the Jewish section of society to whom attendance at a Friday court is hardly possible, no matter how emancipated they are.

To return, however, to the season of 1914, concerning which I started to tell, it may in short be written about in a minor key. Of course, many people came hurrying back to town this week, after the Easter vacation, for the official opening of the season which dates from May 1.

Already the fashionable papers have chronicled the arrival, among others, of Lady Cheylesmore at her house, which is already the scene of much hospitality. Whether Lady Cheylesmore's sister, Mrs. French Vanderbilt, is to come over is uncertain.

Other arrivals during the week include Lady Newborough, formerly Miss Grace Cary of Kentucky, who after wintering abroad will spend the season at her house in Park Lane.

Prince and Princess di San Faustine, who have been in Scotland, will spend only a short time in London before leaving for Paris. The Princess, who was formerly Miss Jane Campbell of New York, spends little time here.

One loss to the season from the entertaining point of views and one which is bound to cause a gap hard to fill, is that Lady Naylor Leyland, formerly Miss Jeanne Chamberlain of Cleveland, Ohio, expects to spend little time in her magnificent residence in Hyde Park, she being in mourning for a near relative.

On the other hand, Sir Robert and Lady Hadfield are due at Carlton House Terrace shortly after their visit to the United States, of which Lady Hadfield is a native, she being the daughter of Colonel Wickersham of Allegheny, Pa. The Hadfields' hospitality is well known.

Count and Countess Laszlo Szechenyi, who have been little seen in London society, have returned to their home in Hungary. The Countess, who was formerly Miss Gladys Vanderbilt, is extremely well liked by those who know her well.

EnglishArtist Ogilvie Scores New Triumph

Duke of Norfolk and Others Buy Remarkable Egyptian Studies.

CAIRO, May 2.—An English painter, F. F. Ogilvie, has been scoring another triumph with a variation of studies in oils and water colors of the famous Temple of Philas, immortalized but recently in Pierre Loti's work, "Le Mort de Philas."

The pictures were painted last Summer and exhibited in London. Mr. Ogilvie is going from one triumph to another and most of this season's studies by him are already labeled "sold."

The Duke of Norfolk has acquired a fine work portraying a stretch of the desert beyond Helouan, showing the lovely palm silhouetted against a glorious sunset.

Other pictures give views of a sandstorm, reaches of the Nile and some fine specimens of ancient Arau houses, as well as Luxor and the Temples, which no painter of merit ever omits from his repertoire.

Dr. Droba, Scientist, Is Killed by Glanders

Hungarian Savant Contracted Disease from Patient Infected by Cats.

CRACOW, Hungary, May 2.—Much regret is felt here, especialy in medical and scientific circles, concerning the death of the well-known scientist, Professor De Ladislaus Droba, the head of the infectious diseases department of the University Hospital.

The professor died in great agony from an attack of glanders contracted, it is believed, from a peasant named Maston, a patient under his care.

Maston caught the infection from cats that had been fed on the flesh of horses which had died from glanders.

American Sculptress, Mrs. Hill, Gives a Tea

FLORENCE, May 2—The fine, warm weather, which featured the whole of April, continues. Hotels are more crowded than ever.

Mr. and Mrs. Benton Billard, Jr., of Boston; Mrs. C. H. O'Dowd and the Misses Florence and Agnes O'Dowd of New York, are at the Modern.

Mrs. Clara Hill, the American sculptress, gave a tea for Miss Anna Winegar of Bronxville, who is returning home.

John J. Hunt, Edmund Burke [illegible] Alexander McDonald, of San Francisco, are at the Hotel De La Ville for a brief stay.

Hit-or-Miss Fashions Bring Home-Dressmaking in Vogue

Wraps, However, Will Defy Efforts of the Amateur—The "Latest Word" from Paris.

By MME. RENEE DUVANT.

Special Cable to the Boston American

PARIS, May 2.—Here we are again in an epoch of home dressmaking—at least for those who have both the talent and the taste for that sort of thing.

Some very rich ladies are fond of this amusement. And since it is such, why find fault with them?

What specially makes home dressmaking tolerable is not a wild new impulse of economy on the part of the fair—for this would render excusable many rasher efforts—but the remarkable laxity of fashionable standards.

There is no longer such a thing as the impeccable cut for a garment. The variations, the departures from fixed lines, are infinite. There is a profusion of garniture, of attached pieces, beneath which the approximate in elegance is easily dissimulated, so that the untutored eye may find in the whole something of real elegance itself.

JACKET BULGE IS "CHIC."

It is "chic" in these days for the jacket to bulge out in the back, for the skirt to be longer behind than in front, for the blouse to have the appearance of having been put on with the back where the front should be. With such a hit-and-miss fashion the ordinary seamstress, employed at intervals by most French families, finds that she can do wonders.

But if this is true of many kinds of robes, it is not true of the latest wraps. The cape will figure in a very imporant sense as distinctively marking the course of fashion.

It will be in the highest degree picturesque, with ideas of form and of draping borrowed from both the classical and mediaeval times.

Certain leaders of style wear manties so voluminous that the ends in front are flung back over the shoulders, with much the same effect as that of a Roman toga.

CAPE LOOKS LIKE WINGS.

But the novelty of novelties is the cape that falls from the shoulders like wings, while a broad band of the same or different stuff, suggesting in form an ancient phylactery, attached in yokelike fashion, passes around the back of the neck, serving there as a sort of collar, and descends at great length in front, where it is usually crossed on the breast or just below it, being sometimes carried twice around the waist, quite like a loose belt, and tied in a large knot either at the side or behind. In warm colors, or at least with a bright lining, which is, of course, abundantly shown, it gives a charming, semi-romantic accentuation to the figure.

HATS ALARMINGLY HIGH.

The hats actually in vogue are of tulle flounces, one above another, dark or light in hue, to harmonize with the gloves.

The large hats will be very flat. In some instances the brim is made growing alarmingly in height. Some of the single plumes seem to reach to the skies, and the crowns of the narrower toques or round hats have a tendency toward exaggeration of proportions. Both these symptoms may be accepted as precursors to the inevitable reaction.

Already a speedy return to breadth of brim seems to be indicated. Whether such return will outlive the Summer or Autumn, of course, cannot well be predicted.

Grand Duke Patron of Art Exhibitions

Display of Latest Works to Be Made at Darmstadt.

DARMSTADT, Hesse, May 2.—From the middle of May to the beginning of October two highly interesting art exhibitions will be held here. For years the Grand Duke Ernst Ludwig has been a recognized patron of art not only of the past but the present also. He has gathered round him a colony of artists and artist-craftsmen who have built themselves on the Mathildenhohe near the town a sort of artists' garden city in which each house and every single item in it are the expression of an artistic individuality. One of the forthcoming exhibitions will show the newest works of these artists.

The second exhibition has been initiated by the Grand Duke himself and Professor George Biermann, and is supervised by the latter who is art-adviser to the Grand Duke and director of the two leading German art magazines, "Cicerone" and "Monatshefte fur Kunstwissenschaft."

Prussians Drive Out Starving Silesians

Poor Peasants Ready to Sell Their Daughters.

BERLIN, May 2.—Amazing stories are being printed in the German newspapers concerning the terrible predicament of Silesian [illegible] in the neighborhood of Cracow. Thousands of men, women and children, mostly Poles and Ruthe[illegible] who come over the border [illegible]alicia, are there begging for fo[illegible]. They belong to the agricultur[illegible] population of that country, a[illegible] been totally ruined by bad [illegible] and general distress prevailing in Austria in consequence of the mo[illegible] for mobilization during the t[illegible]lkan wars. Men are willing t[illegible] their daughters and wives, even for a piece of bread. The glorio[illegible]ssian police have found at last a remedy for these poor wretches. They are being driven back like cattle across the border. Five hundred of them have been so returned. How many perished on the way the officials do not report.

GARDEN PARTIES OPEN UP FAMOUS VILLAS OF ROME

Papal Nobility Jubilant Over Big Reception—The James Hazen Hydes to Prolong Stay.

By CAMILLO CIANFARRA.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

ROME, May 2.—Summer is here and the day at hand when the renaissance suburban villa of the Roman nobles will reopen its rusty gates to fashionable crowds for the garden parties, which are characteristic of the Rome of Leo X. and were sung of in verse and prose by the humanists adorning the court of that great Pope.

The Villa of the Knights of Malta, on the eastern slope of Aventine, was the first to admit a large crowd, and even in this case it was charity that furnished the occasion for the gathering today under the aged palms, the largest and most beautiful in Rome, and cypresses, which witnessed the love duos between the great dames and the knights of the sixteenth century.

COUNT LAVINAZA'S DINNER.

Papal nobility is jubilant over the great success attending the dinner and reception given by the Spanish Ambassador, Count Lavinaza. From the viewpoint of the number of guests the reception marks a record which will never perhaps be surpassed. Over a thousand guests crowded the stately halls of the Spagna Palace. Five Cardinals, headed by the Papal Secretary of State, were present in their red robes. Naturally, with the Vatican etiquette strictly enforced, decollete and other daring productions of fashion were inexorably barred.

Mr. and Mrs. James Hazen Hyde have fallen in love with Rome and decided to stay a few more days. During the week the couple, with a party of friends, made frequent excursions into the Roman Campagna, visiting all the places of interest located out of the beaten track.

Mrs. W. B. Leeds and Lady Sarah Wilson have gone to Venice. So has the Countess Elsie de Perigord.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Moore gave a dinner at the Excelsior for their daughter, the Duchess Torlonia. The guests congratulated the Duchess on her recovery after a long indisposition.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Little of Boston, have returned from Taormina. Mrs. S. R. Guggenheim and Miss Guggenheim, Mr. Albert Hessberg of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Oren Taft, Mrs. Winthrop and Miss Winthrop are at the Excelsior. Mr. and Mrs. William H. Delaney are at the Bristol. Ex-Senator and Mrs. J. S. Fassett left for paris.

Finds Dog That Talks by a Phonetic Code

London Scientist Astounded by an Airedale's Accomplishments.

LONDON, May 2.—Students of psychology are not unacquainted with the wonderful feats of intelligence by dogs, horses, pigs and even donkeys. Experiments have constantly been made, some of which produced astonishing results in different parts of the world.

In an article entitled "Some New Revelations of Animal Psychology," a well-known scientist records some experiments he witnessed at Mannheim, Germany. He made the acquaintance of Mme. Moekel, whose Airedale terrier displayed arithmatical calculating stunts of a most extraordinary manner.

Encouraged by this unlooked for success, the dog's mistress extended the typological code into a sort of phonetic writing with "frequent attribution of syllabic value to the consonants by the use of their name," and the dog was thus made to answer all manner of questions.

Mrs. "Pat" Campbell Lively in Shaw Play

London Society Crowds His Majesty's Theatre to See 'Pygmalion."

LONDON, May 2.—The nine days' wonder of Eliza Doolittle, George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion," has not yet ended.

Society is crowding His Majesty's Theatre to see Mrs. "Pat" Campbell-Cornwallis-West. Those who know her best say there are few dull moments when Mrs. "Pat" is on the scene. There is always interest as to what she will do next.

A member of her company, discussing with Mrs. "Pat" the audience one afternoon, said: "What do you think of them all?"

"Think of them?" said the actress. "Why, they look dull enough to be my creditors."

"But your creditors would scarcely fill the house."

Mrs. Campbell gazed at her wide-eyed. "Fill the house? My dear, they'd run the play over Christmas."

U. S. Women to Leave Aigrettes in France

Paris Hostesses Will Return Home, Without Forbidden Plumage.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, May 2.—Mrs. Farris Thompson of New York, who has been one of the leading Paris hostesses this season, is particularly noteworthy for her devotion to forbidden plumage. She was seen at Auteuil this week in a black straw hat with magnificent aigrettes and black osprey plumage.

In the same category come Mrs. H. C. Chatfield Taylor of Chicago, Mrs. John R. Chadwick of Cleveland, Mrs. William H. Ross of Chicago, Mrs. William A. Whitney of Boston, Mrs. William Draper and Miss Margaret Draper of Washington, Miss Pauline Davis, Mrs. Arthur Claflin, Mrs. George Holt, Mrs. Eugene A. Philbin and Mrs. J. Sloat Fassett, all of New York; and Mrs. Gorgorza, formerly Emma Eames, all of whom when they return to the United States will leave here thousands of dollars worth of aigrettes and osprey plumes.

Miss De Wolfe Seeks Rare Art Treasures in London

Disappointed in Finding Museums Closed Because of the Recent Suffragette Raids.

By W. ORTON TEWSON.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, May 2.—Miss Elsie De Wolfe of New York, who has come to London to make "extensive purchases of objects of art on behalf of Americans whose homes she is decorating, today let the I. N. S. correspondent into a "deadly secret"—she's going to fly with Claude Graham-White, the British aviator, tomorrow, at Hendon.

Miss De Wolfe made the announcement only after obtaining a promise that no wireless message would be sent to her agent, Miss Elizabeth Marbury, who now is crossing the ocean on her way to London.

"If Miss Marbury gets wind of it," Miss De Wolfe declared, "she'd burn up the wireless installation on the boat trying to stop me. I've been in the air once before—with Miss Anne Morgan—in a balloon in Paris. It was wonderful! The whole world looked like one of those relief maps. We arose at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and by 7 o'clock that night had been blown from St. Cloud to Chatres.

"I'm not a bit afraid to go up in an aeroplane and hope Graham-White will loop the loop and do all the other stunts he knows."

Asked as to the status of her suit against the government in which she is fighting the constitutionality of the income tax law, Miss De Wolfe explained the defeat of her attorney, Bourke Cockran, to be actually what they wanted. She added: "Now we have got the case before the United States Supreme Court and when the decision is given it will be final. Men of influence and learning, who are well posted on the subject, all expressed their best wishes, but they admit they are not optimistic regarding my chances of winning the action.

"The suggestion that others are behind me in the fight is untrue. I am doing it alone and unaided because I feel it is not right to tax me on my income of $[illegible],000 which I have earned myself and then put in force a sliding scale benefitting out of all proportion the multimillionaire with an income ten times as big as mine. My contention is that the sliding scale is wrong in principle and unfair in practice.

"If there is going to be any discrimination, and that is the chief point in my case, that discriminatory legislation is unconstitutional. (Let discrimination be made between the self earned fortunes and inherited fortunes.) Where is the justice of taxing me on my income, every penny of which is the result of my own hard labor, at the same rate as the brainless youth who inherits his wealth? Personally I am not over-sanguine of victory, but in any event I am sure my action will have one beneficial result at least. What really started me in the determination to fight was the discovery that a corporation had withheld the amount of the tax in paying me dividends. I refused to accept the deduction and insisted that the corporation pay the dividend in full.

"The point made is that the government is receiving payments in many instances from both the corporation and the investor.

"The corporation through fear of the consequences and the investor throught characteristic honesty pay the tax. Certainly nobody will question the absurdity of this phase of the law."

Referring to her mission to London, Miss De Wolfe expressed despair at finding virtually all museums closed.

"Of course I am an ardent believer in votes for women," she said, but when women, otherwise sane and decent, resort to destroying priceless works of art by arson and bomb throwing and wanton destruction generally, I fail to follow their motives. How they ever hope to attain their object through such vandalism is beyond me. Yet I have talked to women whom I respect highly and whose minds are of the highest order and whose position in England is unassailable, [illegible] to my dismay I find these women heartily approving the militant methods. Naturally the [illegible] has not the same interest [illegible] anything beautiful art treasures [illegible] I have but everyone knows England is the great storehouse of the world's treasures, which is one of the principal reasons for the annual invasion of American tourists, and with these closed the nation must suffer financially."

Armour Aids Kaiser in Corfu Excavations

Chicago Millionaire Assists in Baring of Ancient Temple.

BERLIN, May 2.—According to dispatches from Corfu, the Kaiser has been devoting almost all of his time there superintending the excavations into the buried ruins near his castle.

Allison V. Armour of Chicago, the American millionaire, has become the Emperor's daily companion and one of his most valued assistants in directing the digging operations. Thanks to their joint efforts a large part of the buried temple near Achilleion has been laid bare. One of the pediments unearthed bears inscriptions which are expected to throw valuable light on ancient traditions of the island as soon as experts have deciphered them. Mr. Armour, who arrived on the yacht Utowana, is the Kaiser's guest, a distinction which he shares with the King and Queen of Greece.

Melba Entertains Boston Opera Co.

Americans Form Large Portion of Organization's Paris Salon Audience.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, May 2.—Mme. Melba had a busy afternoon this week entertaining the Boston Opera Company chorus at a tea party at her house in the avenue Henri Martin. The weather being torrid, the troupe indulged in an orgy of ice cream and soda water.

The Boston Opera Company's season is now well under way and the company is enjoying a large measure of patronage from the Americans here.

Among those figuring in brilliant opera audiences this week were Ambassador and Mrs. Herrick, the Duchess de la Rochefoucauld (nee Mitchell), Princess Lynar, formerly May Parsons, Mrs. G. W. Mackay and daughter, Princess Stigliano Colonna, who has returned to Paris from the Riviera. Mrs. Philip M. Lydig, Mrs. Morton Mitchell and Mrs. W. L. Corey.

Gilbert White Shows Mural Decorations

Work for New Haven's Town Hall Admired in Paris.

PARIS, May 2.—Gilbert White today exhibited in his Paris studio, mural decorations he had painted for the Town Hall of New Haven, Ct., the work being admired by a large American gathering. A hit is being made in the Beaux Arts salon by the painting "The Lacemaker," by Frances Trumbull Lea. It represents Mary Parker of Salem, Mass., making a filet of lace. It is carried out in various shades of blue and is one of the most successful of the less pretentious paintings in the American section.

Perry Belmonts Are Guests of a Prince

Di Castagnetos Entertain New Yorkers in Rome—Mrs. Pattison Sings.

ROME, May 2.—Prince and Princess Di Castagneto entertained at dinner this week for Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont. Count Deportuales, Portuguese Ambassador to the Quirinal, and E. Fabbri of New York were among those sitting around the rose-decorated tables.

Mrs. Pattison, the American soprano, sang American and English songs before the large and fashionable audience, which cheered enthusiastically every number on the program.

A lecture on American and English folklore and songs was later delivered by Miss Margherita Berle.

Try to Blackmail Prince with Letters

Love Epistles of Daughter Later Seized by Police.

MILAN, May 2.—A daring attempt has been made to blackmail Prince Emanuela Gonzaga by threatening to publish a batch of love-letters written by his daughter, who died in her teens about two years ago.

The prince recently received a telephone message from some unknown person, who demanded sufficient funds to enable him to emigrate to the United States and start a fresh career.

A threat was made that unless the prince complied the unknown would publish a quantity of compromising love-letters from the pen of Princess Elizabeth.

An appointment was made, and punctually a mysterious individual, smartly dressed, drove up to the prince's palace in a motor car. Apparently scenting danger, however, he merely delivered into Prince Gonzaga's hands a packet of twenty-eight letters, saying the prince could peruse them at his leisure.

The stranger said they were only a few of the letters.

The police later arrested the blackmailer, a man named Gaetano Freni, from Paterno, Sicily, at whose house were seized 150 original letters in the princess's handwriting.

POOR PAINTERS OF PARIS STARVE EFFACED BY RICH

Unable to Find Space in Salons, the Newcomers Cannot Reach Buying Public.

By C. F. BERTELLI.

Special Cables to Sunday American.

PARIS, May 2.—The other day a young Polish painter died of starvation in the Latin Quarter. He had not partaken of food in forty-eight hours. Why this should be so will perhaps be understood when it is stated that upwards of 10,000 paintings are now being exhibited in one building, the Grand Palais, in connection with the Spring Salons.

At the Artistes there 5,547 canvases, at the Beaux Arts Salon, under the same roof, there are more than 4,000. Most of this overwhelming flood of pictures is produced within a few square miles on the left bank of the River Seine, and nowhere in the world is the struggle for life so keen and bitter as in this hive of artistic activity.

Thousands of hungry artists—American, English, French, German—in fact of every nationality—are now despairing over the feverish output of paintings which annually flood the market, making it more and more difficult for new men to earn a living. In addition to the miles of canvases exhibited in the Grand Palais there are dozens of other important shows given in Paris yearly, and it is computed that not less than 25,000 new paintings are produced yearly in Paris alone.

Rising men bitterly complain of the fact that most of the available wall space in the exhibition halls is occupied by wealthy artists of established reputation, which has the effect of crowding out the works of newcomers.

The worst feature of this state of things is that reputable painters, having gratified their vanity by showing the public their works, take the canvases back to their studios and blot them out, while the young men who [illegible] pictures to sell are at their wits' end to reach the public.

Americans are overcoming this difficulty by organizing a purely American exhibition to be held next Fall, whereat young men will be welcomed. But if every section of painters swarming the Latin Quarter decided on the same action it is pointed out Paris will have to begin building dozens of new halls in order to accommodate the 100,000 square feet of canvas now representing the yearly output of Paris.

Austrian Clubwomen Begin 'War' on Flirts

Petition with Thousands of Names Will Be Presented to Parliament.

VIENNA, May 2.—Women in Vienna have begun a crusade against male flirts. Frau Marianne Hainisch, founder and president of the Austrian Women's Clubs, drew up a slashing indictment of the offenders at a recent meeting, which resulted in a resolution to petition Parliament to make an end of the flirts' pursuit by legislation.

Today girls here are constantly exposed to the impertinence of men. If a policeman is asked to protect them he only laughs, or perhaps arrests the girl.

The petition, which was drafted at the close of the meeting, will be presented to Parliament in the June session. Several hundred thousand signatures are attached to it. The Austrian Women's Clubs do not feel over-confident of its being adopted.

MUFFLER CUT-OUT BARRED

Police Will Enforce Law Governing Mufflers and Smoky Exhausts.

By J. C. KERRISON.

The use of the muffler cutout and the use of a smoky exhaust are two things which the police of the city of Boston will no longer permit. The powers that be have issued an edict against both of these nuisances. It is only right that they should, for there is not a single reason why they should be permitted. They are things the cause for which has been eliminated by the manufacturers of the up-to-date car.

The law is against them, and it should be enforced. There is no doubt but what there are certain kinds of cars which pick up better when the muffler is open, but with the improvement in motors this is no longer so universally the case. This is, perhaps, illustrated by the fact that many makes of cars have not provided cutouts, they believing that the same are unnecessary.

There was once an idea that with the muffler cutout the motor required more power. It may have been the case in the early days of motor construction, but according to experts official tests have effectually disposed of any such theory. Where there was any difference the advantage in favor of the use of the cutout was small, and at a car speed of thirty miles an hour the readings were identical. At 1,000 r. p. m. the findings favored the closed muffler.

Coming back to the question of the smoky exhaust, in the early days these were necessary because the lubricating system was not so thoroughly efficient as it is today. In those days one thought that the more oil was used the better the motor would work. The oiling systems of those days were crude compared with the systems in vogue today, and it was not the fault of the owner or driver so much as it was constructive detail that caused the oily, dark, nauseating exhaust. The law governing the use of these two things as amended is a just law, and its enforcement will not be frowned upon by the majority of the motorists.

Pneumatic Tires Best for Electrics

"Resilient pneumatics are the most profitable for the electric car owner in the long run, providing you get durability, too," said A J Wills, manager Auto Tires Sales, the B. F. Goodrich Company, Akron, Ohio, when interviewed on the solid vs pneumatic controversy. "The cord tire is more comfortable for the passengers, and protects the delicate parts of the electric vehicle from vibration, thus insuring the vital parts of the car against crystalization.

"Early attempts toward power conservation—the vital issue in electric vehicles—brought out many makes of special electric tires. Some were highly efficient as regards current consumption, but all were fragile and supersensitive to abuse until the Silvertown cord construction came out.

"If there ever was any advantage in using solid tires, it was because users disliked the thought of a blowout but now that a durable tire has been perfected, the only objection to the comfortable, resilient tire has been removed."

Truck Owners Are More Far-Sighted

Motor truck operators are becoming more far-sighted every day, according to C. W. Martin, Jr., manager of the motor truck fire department of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

Martin says in part: "The great majority of the truck owners are through with penny wise and pound foolish ideas. They realize that a slightly increased expenditure in the beginning generally means a big saving in the end, and especially is this true in buying tires.

"Take for instance the Goodyear cushion demountable tire. After it had proven itself so thoroughly in fire department service we put it on the market for commercial use, with the result that the tire was immediately and widely demanded in spite of the fact that the initial cost was slightly higher than that of the ordinary solid tire.

"The reason truck owners were willing to do this is very apparent. A little study showed at once that the saving in upkeep, especially in the renewal of engine and chassis parts in a year's time, amounted to quite an item.

OHIO HAS BIG DEMAND.

In an effort to catch up with demand in Southern Ohio, the Studebaker Corporation records showed on one day late in April that more than $50,000 worth of Studebaker "Four" and "Six" cars were at that time in transit between the factory and the various stores of the Twyman Motor Company, Southern Ohio distributors.

The 1914 Reo has established a new standard of value in the automobile world.

Makes Increase in Salesroom

Growth of Business Demands Expansion of Quarters.

A little less than a year ago the Chandler Motor Car Company of New England and the Paige Motor Car Company of New England were organized by R. S. Nettleton and George A. Crittenden for the distribution of Chandler light sixes and Paige four-cylinder cars throughout New England.

Nettleton and Crittenden originally planned to do nothing but wholesale work on these two lines, and with that object in view secured space in the Fenway Garage, and until December of last year had their headquarters and distributing office at that garage.

It became apparent, however, at the very inception of the business, that the demand for those two cars among retail buyers in Boston and immediate vicinity was so great that it would be necessary to obtain a salesroom and service station to look after this field in addition to the wholesale work. The volume of retail sales became so large that on the first of December a salesroom was secured at 1,11[illegible] Boylston street also service station in the same building, and an additional service station on Scotia street. The facilities thus acquired were ample for the proper care of Chandler and Paige cars until the boom of the Boston Automobile Show made these quarters inadequate, consequently Nettleton and Crittenden are now installing their two companies in a much larger and better equipped salesroom at 1,108-1,110 Boylston street, and have secured a large garage at 86 Ferdinand street, capable of handling eighty cars, for their service and supply station.

Great Addition to the Premier Line

The demand for a high-grade six-cylinder motor car at a medium price has been ably met by the new series Premier 6-49. This car has the Weidely chassis, famous throughout the country, and is equipped with the six-cylinder 4½x5 motor, which has met with such success in long distance runs. The stream line body is designed and constructed along the latest and most up-to-date lines and presents a smart and distinguished appearance. The economy tests of the motor on the road under actual service conditions stamp it as one of the most economical machines in the world.

THINGS TO LET ALONE.

The magneto and the speedometer head should not be taken apart or any attempts made to repair them when they are out of order. They call for special expert skill not found in ordinary repair shops.

Trucks in the Mexican Conflict

General Villa, the Mexican rebel, is surely up to date in his fighting equipment, having recently purchased a Mack two ton truck from a south-western dealer, says Norman H Ha[illegible]day, manager of the Mack company's Boston office. It would be hard to recognize the machine as it now stands, General Villa having equipped it with an armored body completely covered and wheels to use on the railroad tracks. Rubber-tired road wheels are also carried for cross-country work. The machine is used for carrying ammunition and rifles and is equipped with machine guns for fighting purposes.

Day Baker Will Be Principal Speaker

Day Baker, district manager of the New England electric division for the General Vehicle Company, Inc., has been selected as the speaker at the annual dinner of the Milford Automobile Club on May 1, which is the largest club of its kind in New Hampshire.

Mr Baker's subject will be "The Automobile as a Serious Business Proposition." Although Mr Baker is usually spoken of in connection with electric vehicle transportation, his office as treasurer of the Boston Commercial Motor Vehicle Association and his thorough knowledge of the general automobile activities in New England enable him to handle in a masterly way the subject which has been selected.

Officer Escapes by Motor Car

Sales Manager Schwartz of the Metz Automobile Company has just received a letter from the Metz agent at El Paso, Texas, containing a story of a sensational escape of a Constitutionalist officer in a Metz car from the Federal officers during the Torreon campaign. Several Metz cars are being used with Villa's army, chiefly on account of their ability to travel over the rough country, where a heavier car would quickly get in trouble. Had the Metz car failed, Lieutenant Durango and his companion would probably now be noted among the missing.

Owner Receives Best of Service

Studebaker Branch Well Equipped to Care for Owner's Needs.

In purchasing a Studebaker "Four" or "Six" the owner is guaranteed the very best of service and co-operation not only by the local distributors, but also from the Studebaker Branch, two distinct establishments working in perfect harmony for the best interests of their patrons in Boston and New England.

The retail business is conducted by the Donovan Motor Car Company, of which Joseph S Donovan is the president and general manager. Mr Donovan has one of the modern buildings on Commonwealth avenue with spacious salesrooms, general offices and garage on the ground floor, and a finely equipped service station on the second floor. This service station is equipped with the latest machinery for making repairs of any kind, and a force of skilled workmen, who are thoroughly familiar with Studebaker construction, render prompt and efficient service whenever an owner of a car has any trouble with his machine.

KNOCKS ARE EXPENSIVE.

At the end of the first two thousand miles the average automobile will require slight tightening up of the crankshaft and connecting rod bearings. To allow small knocks to go uncared for will result in great damage to the parts very soon.

SPARK ADVANCE.

Cold lubricating oil, a broken spring, and several other causes that can not be easily seen may cause the automatic spark advance to fail in action and result in a vicious "kick-back" that will break bones.

SPEED RIVALS BECOME MATES

Oldfield and Cooper to Drive on the Same Team.

Barney Oldfield, the world's most popular speed king and founder of the automobile racing sport in America, will have as his team mate in the 500-mile international sweepstakes this year on the Indianapolis Motor Speedway the youngest and most spectacular speed star of the 1913 road racing season.

When Oldfield decided to drive a Stutz in the Indianapolis speed classic, teaming with Cooper and Gil Anderson, a speed rivalry which marked many recent races was ended.

As members of the same team all the old rivalry is laid aside. All three members of the team are close friends and their ambition will be to defeat the foreign invaders by putting across a winner rather than to outdo each other by their individual efforts. Personal glory will be forgotten in the trying six-hour session on the vitrified brick course. Barney has always had a wholesome respect for the Stutz speed creations.

Purchasers Not Technical Experts

"Every season adds very noticeably to the number of laymen who thoroughly understand automobiles," says Ralph Ketchum of the KisselKar, "but the sort of buyer who cares to discuss technical details is still greatly in the minority and the salesman should always wait for an invitation before plunging into the intricacies of mechanical construction.

"There are certain points that every prospective purchaser novice to expert, are more concerned about and regarding which they must be satisfied before a sale is possible. These include the appearance of the car, its attribution of comfort and convenience, its facility of operation and the accessibility of its working parts.

"Inspecting and demonstrating the car having cleared up these questions, the wise purchaser will ask about the experiences of present owners."

Big Entry for French Road Race

Six nations will be represented in the Grand Prix, the great French road race to be held on the Lyons circuit July 4 next. France, Italy, Germany, England, Belgium and Switzerland are the countries represented. The total entries number forty-one of which France leads with twelve cars, Italy has eleven, Germany eight, England six, Belgium and Switzerland two each. The entry list is the largest ever made for the Grand Prix and there are more nations represented than at any time in the past.

PRIMER CONNECTIONS.

When a cup or other form of dash primer is used, the tube which connects with the manifold is apt to become disconnected by the vibration. To avoid this trouble solder a sleeve on the end of the tube and allow a slip connection with the reservoir.

WILL CONTROL CYCLECAR SPORT

Association Declares Its Independence in Control of This Branch.

Four-fifths of the cyclecar manufacturers of the United States and a large number of the cyclecar clubs have declared for entire independence in the control of the cyclecar sport and pastime and the declaration of independence of the Cyclecar Association of America. The cyclecar interests have grown within two years until today they occupy a most important position in the motor car industry. Cyclecar interests have felt from the first that control from the automobile interests would not be acceptable and that motorcycle control was out of the question. To the makers and to the clubs the situation became acute and this is clearly shown by the signing of the pledge by over forty manufacturers and the passing of resolutions by cyclecar clubs organized all over the United States.

When it was formed the Cyclecar Association of America passed a resolution which had for its intent the arrangement to work in entire harmony with all sport controlling bodies of the world and this it will do. Racing and touring events will be sanctioned by the C. A. A. and the sport and pastime will be advanced by the promotion of great touring and racing events. A great majority of the members of the Cyclecar Manufacturers National Association of which W H. McIntyre of Auburn, Indiana, is president, have pledged their support to the C. A. A.

New Marmon Model Shown in Boston

Frank E. Wing, New England distributor of Marmon cars, has on exhibition at his salesroom, 562 Commonwealth avenue, a new Marmon roadster in the "41" Medium Six model. It is a very handsome model the body design being of the modified steam line type, neat and refined smart and yet conservative. The Marmon "41" Roadster contains a number of new and attractive features not commonly found in Roadster models.

The car is equipped with a two-piece wind shield, both sections being adjustable to any position, providing ample protection and ventilation, which are a part of the body, and the bottom of the shield is built to conform to the low graceful curve of the hooded dash, and presents a very symmetrical and handsome appearance.

Gilson Returns to Motor Industry

James W. Gilson, for years connected with the Mitchell-Lewis Motor Company, announces that he has become associated with the L-P-C Motor Company, of Racine, Wis., makers of the Lewis Six. The Lewis Six, says Mr. Gilson, is the first car built in its entirety in America from designs by M. Petard, the celebrated French engineer. I believe that Lewis Six is without question the marvel of the times presenting, as it does, such complete simplicity of design, at least one thousand fewer parts than any car in its class; light weight, 2,2[illegible]0 lbs., six-passenger capacity; 48 horsepower and a gas consumption of at least sixteen miles to the gallon. All these points as combined in the Lewis Six assure to the public that economy of operation that is the talk of the day.

GOODYEAR ALL-WEATHER TREAD

Pay Goodyear Prices For Your Tires

Else Require a Reason for an Extra Price

Sixteen makes of tires this year sell above No-Rim-Cut prices.

Some are nearly one-half higher. That means much added tire expense unless those tires are better.

We claim that none are better—none so good. And we cite these facts to prove it.

No-Rim-Cut tires make rim-cutting impossible. And we control the only feasible method yet found to end this waste.

Needless blow-outs, due to wrinkled fabric, are prevented by our "On-Air" cure. This extra process costs us $1,500 daily, and no other maker employs it.

Loose treads are combated in No-Rim-Cut tires by a patent method used by no one else. It lessens this danger by 60 per cent.

All-Weather treads excel all other anti-skids. They are tough, double-thick and enduring. They are flat and regular, so they run like smooth treads. Yet no other tread offers to wet roads such sharp-edged, resistless grips.

All these costly features — these money-saving features — are found in No-Rim-Cut tires alone.

What Extra Value?

Then what of extra value can higher prices buy? We know of no way at present to build better tires—to give lower cost per mile. We have tried thousands of formulas, fabrics, methods and processes. But no man as yet has found any way to improve on No-Rim-Cut tires.

Users have found these the best tires built. That is shown by the fact of the largest sale. And they gained that top place when No-Rim-Cut tires cost more than other tires.

Mammoth output has cut Goodyear costs. Modern equipment has cut them. And we took last year an average profit of only 6½ per cent. In 1913 our price reductions totaled 28 per cent.

Those are the reasons for Goodyear prices. It is easy to make a lower-priced tire; but a higher-priced tire—worth the extra price—has not yet been created.

Prove this by comparison. Any dealer will supply you if you ask for Goodyear tires.

SERVICE DEPOT OF THE FORD CO.

Manufacturing Plant Unexcelled in This Territory.

Eight and a half years ago the first of this month Charles E. Fay, with a force of a half dozen persons, established in this city the first New England factory branch of the Ford Motor Company. On May Day of this year he took possession of his new quarters situated across the [illegible] River at the junction of Brookline street and Charles River [illegible], representing an investment of [illegible] a million of dollars [illegible] a working force not of six [illegible].

This in a nutshell [illegible] the rise and growth of the Ford business in New England [illegible] has been duplicated [illegible] in other sections of America [illegible] building is five stories [illegible] among the most improved [illegible] factory and office construction [illegible] and is a wonderful material illustration of what progressiveness [illegible] in business can accomplish. It carries with it a story of loyalty of construction, loyalty of sales and loyalty of service, not only to the owner but likewise to the builder.

The home plant can construct, but to carry out its ideas the same loyalty that exists at Detroit must necessarily exist elsewhere and in no city in this country has this loyalty been given the home office to a greater degree than it has here in Boston.

In a concern of such large proportions as is the Ford company [illegible] to a considerable degree [illegible] but still in review of the progress of the Ford in New England one consideration must be given to its New England manager, Charles E. Fay, whose untiring efforts, combined with the factory policy of [illegible] have made the Ford the [illegible].

The building is situated [illegible] commanding position, the salesrooms being on the first floor. It is attractive but [illegible] simplicity in its decorations, as [illegible] the construction of the car, being the keynote. To the rear of the salesrooms is found the repair department [illegible] enter by one door, are given the necessary attention, and leave by another door on Brookline street, so that [illegible] will pass each other going in or coming out of the building. All repairs of a minor nature are made on this floor.

The first portion of the second floor over the salesroom is given over to the administration department, and is finished in quartered oak with quartered oak furniture and is laid out along the most effective lines. Directly to the rear of the administration department is found the lounging and recreation rooms for the administration force as well as a private hospital. Then comes the service parts department, presided over by T. A. Ross.

It is on the third floor where the manufacturing end of the business commences. These floors [illegible] way, are 545 feet long and seventy-five feet in width. The units come from the factory and the assembling is started on the floor, commencing with one end of the building is found the final assembling of the motors.

It takes thirty-five minutes at the present time from the start to the finish to manufacture a completed car and today Manager Fay is turning out no less than twenty-five a week, and in the very near future will increase this output to at least forty, he having on hand at the present time sufficient material to construct 1,000 cars.

On the fifth floor one finds the stock of bodies, upholstery, the varnishing and paint room, and this floor in itself reveals the very latest in manufacturing efficiency. The Ford Company has so planned things that in this building everything in the way of automobile constructing and finish can be accomplished, and in doing so it has studied to produce maximum of result at the minimum of cost without slighting the quality of the product.

In short there is not a single thing lacking in the entire establishment. On the north side of the building is a craneway 37 feet long, permitting the housing of a half a dozen heavy freight cars for both receiving and shipping vehicles.

This great plant furnishes Ford cars for five of the New England States, the only exception being that of Connecticut, and it must be a matter of great pride to Charles E. Fay to contemplate what is now under his jurisdiction and compare it with the plant of eight years ago. Assisting Mr. Fay as superintendent of the assembling plant is William E. Lalime, while J. S. Keown is assistant manager and superintendent of agencies. At the opening of the plant there were present from the factory H. T. Hickey and W. S. Knudsen, who have visited every one of the Ford assembling plants throughout the country, and unhesitatingly pronounce this the most complete and best of the lot.

IS IN CHARGE OF A GREAT INDUSTRIAL PLANT

Charles E. Fay, representing the great interests of the Ford Motor Company throughout New England.

ROAD CONDITIONS IN NEW ENGLAND

Massachusetts State Roads Are in Excellent Condition This Spring.

Owing to the very heavy fall of snow during the past Winter in Western Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine, many of the roads of those States, ordinarily very good in Summer, are at the present time impassable, and can hardly be expected to be in fair condition before June 1, and probably not in good condition before June 15, according to the Automobile Legal Association.

The State roads of Massachusetts are in very good condition except over Jacobs Ladder, between Chester and Lee, but some of the so-called State roads in New Hampshire are still very muddy and rough.

In Massachusetts, especially the northwestern part of the State, it is reported that practically all roads are dangerous, and only a few days ago it was reported that seven automobiles were stalled in the mud between Palmer and Ware.

Reduce Wheel Tread in South

That virtually all automobile manufacturers build for southern demand a differently equipped car from that sold in the North is a fact known to but few motorists.

The northern States demand cars whose wheels run in a track fifty-six inches apart. This tread is also the standard to which European cars conform.

The cars built especially for southern trade have a tread of sixty inches.

How this condition first became necessary is a matter on which members of the vehicle trade have argued for many years. General opinion seems to agree that, on account of road conditions which once prevailed south of the Dixie line, the greater tread was adopted to ensure needed stability and prevent overturning.

The standard was established long before the day of the motor car. Even when automobiles began to attain general use there was still a disposition on the part of the southern buyer to give preference to a wide-tread car.

That there has been a marked lessening of this tendency during the past two seasons is a fact brought out by E. R. Benson, vice-president of the Studebaker Corporation in charge of automobile distribution. Mr. Benson also predicts that the time is not far distant when the superior advantages of the standard tread will result in a passing of the old distinction between North and South. He bases this prediction on the general improvement of road conditions throughout the entire South.

TO BUILD TRUCK.

W. C. Guilder, formerly manager of the Mack Bros.' Motor Car Co. at Allentown, Pa., has recently become associated with the Britton-Stevens Motors Corporation as vice-president and general manager, and under his supervision this company will build a line of motor trucks to be called the Bay State.

HARD, STRENUOUS RUN FOR MOTORS

The Glidden Tour Will Be a Continuous Performance This Year.

The National Reliability Tour of the American Automobile Association, which this time will be in the form of a day and night non-motor stop run from Chicago to Boston, will start June 29. Managed by the Chicago Automobile Club, the run will be under the direct supervision of the A. A. A. touring and contest boards, and Chairmen Frank Mudd and Richard Kennerdell have jointly agreed upon the conditions governing this quite unique test.

The contest board has provided a stock car definition which will call for registration of the different models by the manufacturers, and this will require number of cylinders, bore, stroke; make and model of magneto; make, model and size of carburetor; tire sizes, wheelbase, and such equipment as starters, lighting, shock absorbers, horns, etc. The stock car definition is a simple registration not requiring the technical committee to visit factories.

The contestants will be divided into three classes. One will be for stock cars listing over [illegible], for which the prize will be the [illegible] Trophy, another for stock cars listing under $1,200, with the [illegible] Trophy going to the winner; a third class of non-stock cars [illegible] by private owners with the possession of the A. A. A. artistic [illegible] trophy as the incentive. Certificates of merit will be awarded to [illegible] competing car finishing the run without stoppage of the motor.

The run will require approximately sixty-five hours, starting from Chicago at 2 o'clock, Monday, June [illegible], and reaching Boston at 12 o'clock July 2. The schedule calls for [illegible] miles per hour between sunrise and sunset, fifteen miles per hour between sunset and sunrise the [illegible] night, and eighteen miles per hour between sunrise and sunset the [illegible] nights. [illegible] at Bryan, O., Cleveland, Buffalo, [illegible]cuse, Albany, New York City, Springfield and Boston.

Beauty Drives an Oakland Sedan

Valeska Suratt, the famous beauty who is starring with the Red [illegible] Company in her sensational play "Black Crepe and Diamonds" is now in the possession of an Oakland Sedan, which she has just purchased.

Miss Suratt with characteristic independence, said "I wanted a car I could drive myself and I have looked at enclosed cars both in New York and abroad, but until I found the Oakland Sedan, none of them seemed to just suit me. I love beautiful things and my car is surely beautiful; and its luxurious appointments pleased me too."

She will have the car upholstered in blue silk brocade, her favorite color, and the material will be imported from Paris at a cost of two hundred and fifty dollars. Her monogram "V. S." in gold, and a red [illegible] will be painted on the panels of the door.

Electric Men Will Hold Convention

The second annual convention of electric vehicle interests will be held in Boston May 19 and 20 under the auspices of the New England Section of the Electric Vehicle Association and the Electric Motor Car Club, with which organizations the central station, electric vehicle manufacturing and allied interests will co-operate. The meetings will be held at the Engineers' Club at Commonwealth avenue and Arlington street.

At the convention last year a large number of men interested in the development of the electric vehicle was present, and at the business sessions there were interesting papers read, followed by illuminative discussions. This year it is intended to make the convention of even greater interest than a year ago. Committees have been appointed and already the plans are well started.

Hauls Over 590 Carloads of Marble

An interesting problem in hauling heavy materials from freight cars to the job was solved lately by J. F. Kulp & Sons, Buffalo, N. Y., who own four Pierce-Arrow five-ton trucks. This firm had the contract for hauling all the marble for the new Catholic Cathedral at Buffalo. The total amount of marble used in the building is a little over 590 carloads, 450 cars of exterior and 140 cars of interior.

Some difficulty was experienced at first in the handling of the marble, both at the car end and at the building site.

Breakage was practically nil, and both contractors and engineers state that they were never held up for stone on account of the trucks.

One truck, in a nine-hour day, hauled from 50 to 55 tons of marble, the round trip averaging about eight miles.

USED CAR PRICES SLASHED

See What $500 Cash Will Buy

ONCE a year (and only once a year) we slash the price of every used car in our stock. This great annual price-wrecking sale is now on. The richest bargains you ever saw in cars of genuine merit are here waiting for you to take them. You will not find their equal anywhere.

Remember this: We are not second-hand dealers. Our business is selling new cars. We handle used cars only incidentally, and we do not try, do not expect, to make any profit on them. That's why this sale offers you an unusual chance to buy a thoroughly good car for very little money.

Come in and see what $500 cash will buy. We don't print the names of the cars because the only way you can do yourself justice is to see the actual cars themselves and ride in the one that interests you. But don't wait until the car that would just suit you has been sold to somebody else.

If you want a car that you'll be proud to own—a car that will cost you but little money—come in now.

If you own a small car and want a better one, bring in the old car and we'll take it in trade.

ALL RECORDS ARE SMASHED

Trainload of Motor Vehicles Delivered in Record Time.

The Maxwell Motor Sales Corporation of Detroit, Mich., has just put over a feat that is unexcelled in motor history in this section of the country. On Friday it delivered a train load of cars, representing a cash value of $78,000, to its district manager F. G. Parker, in Portland, Me. This is the third train load of Maxwells that has been delivered in New England within the last six months and proves beyond question that the Detroit concern is a decidedly important factor in the motor world.

Some ten days ago Mr. Parker insisted that he be furnished with a trainload of cars in order to satisfy the insistent demands of his dealers. Sales Manager Redding at the factory was at first adverse to making such a shipment, but finally he was prevailed upon to give special attention to the northeast corner of New England. The aid of the Grand Trunk was solicited in making a record run from Detroit to Portland, and so well did the railroad handle matters that despite the fact that the train had to be broken and sent over two lines, it was finally reunited and brought into Portland exactly 72 hours after it left Detroit.

This is the fastest time freight has ever travelled over this road, and in order to accomplish the same the train was forced to average approximately thirty miles an hour during the entire period. The trainload was made up of an equal number of 4-25, 4-35 and 6-50 models, and was the biggest shipment of motor vehicles that has ever entered the Pine Tree State at one and the same time.

Upon the arrival of the train, Mr. Parker decided to make May day a real Maxwell day. He invited all of his agents from within a radius of 300 miles to come to Portland and join in the festivities before breaking up the train for shipment of the different cars to their several destinations. President Walter E. Flanders and Salesmanager Redding were invited from the factory, but they were prevented from attending, they sending as their substitute, W. D. Paine, Eastern supervisor of the company. Ralph Coburn, district manager of Southern New England, and Harry J. DeBarr, special factory representative, were among the guests, and were loud in their congratulations for the speed shown by the Grand Trunk and the enterprise of the Maxwell dealers throughout the Pine Tree State in making this trainload shipment an absolute necessity.

Mr. DeBarr brought with him a veritable moving picture show consisting of four reels containing 4,000 feet of motor pictures illustrative of the workings of the big Maxwell plant in Detroit. At the conclusion of the picture show the dealers and Maxwell boys enjoyed dinner at the Congress Square Hotel, Mr. Paine acting as toastmaster. Mr. Paine congratulated the men upon their activity and assured them that the factory was proud of them, and that he would do his utmost to bring about the granting of their request for the delivery of a second trainload the latter part of this month.

California Has a 50,000-Mile Club

California has developed a new idea in organizations of motor car owners. In most instances automobile clubs are non-exclusive in membership so far as the achievement of car and owner is concerned, qualifications being based on entirely different matters. The new California idea, however, is based entirely on driving records, and is confined to Cadillac owners who have a mileage of 50,000 or more.

The idea started in the garage of Don Lee, California distributor for the Cadillac, when several owners recently were swapping experiences in reeling off the miles. Nearly all had driven at least 50,000 miles and there were some who had touched the 75,000 and 100,000 marks. Someone suggested that a long distance touring club be formed, and the idea met with such favor that the "Cadillac 50,000-Mile Club" was organized immediately.

FROM SALESMAN TO GENERAL MANAGER OF GREAT FACTORY

Charles W. Churchill, who has just been appointed general manager of the Winton Motor Car Company

President Alexander Winton announces the appointment of Charles W. Churchill as general manager of the Winton Motor Car Company. This is a newly created office. Mr. Churchill has been with the Winton company for ten years. Starting as salesman at the Cleveland branch, he became successively assistant manager of that branch, manager of the New York branch and general sales manager, occupying the latter position five years. The selection of Mr. Churchill for the new office of general manager assures a continuance of the same stable policies that have made the Winton company one of the most successful in the industry, and one that is particularly strong in friendly relations with its patrons.

Decided Demand for Electric Starters

That motorists have come to the conclusion that the self-starter is really an accomplished fact is proven by the large number of people that are having this equipment put on their machines. Many owners have cars that were produced before self-starters were part of the equipment, and these cars are still very serviceable. The Boice-Perrine Company is making them more so by attaching self-starters, and the company is doing a big business. The purchaser has his choice of the new type air starter that acts independently of the cylinder, and also the single unit electric starting-lighting systems, together with the old standby, the Vesta dynamite.

Makes Fast Trip on Motorcycle

Covering nineteen miles in thirty minutes on a motorcycle in the early morning hours is not a daily occurrence, but that it can be done was shown recently by Manager W. J. Walker, of the New England branch of the Harley-Davidson Motor Company, when he was awakened in his room at the Hotel Lenox at 3 o'clock in the morning and informed that his Danvers store was burning. He covered the distance between Boston and Danvers on an eight horsepower, two-speed twin model over bad roads masked by the dark in exactly thirty minutes and was on the scene before the fire was under control.

GREAT MILEAGE ON GALLON OF GAS

Wonderful Performance Made by Otto Lawton of Boston.

Forty-nine and a half miles traveled on one gallon of gasoline is the new world's record created by a Franklin little six driven by Otto Lawton of this city on Friday last. That day had been selected by the Franklin company as the day on which each of its branches should make a test of the gasoline consumption of its product, and so at each one of the branches of this company special efforts were made to establish a mark that would excel that created by the others.

Boston seems to have been particularly fortunate, inasmuch as it established a mileage of three and a half miles greater than the best previous mark for a six-cylinder motor. It was shortly after 10 o'clock Friday that Otto Lawton at the wheel of a 6-30 Franklin, with Carroll J. Swan of the Pilgrim Publicity and H. H. Martin of the Boston Transcript, as official observers, left the Franklin company on Commonwealth avenue. The car was driven to Weston and then returned to Boston. Without any adjustments whatever, a second trip was made over this course, and when the motor died from lack of the life-giving fluid the odometer registered exactly forty-nine and a half miles.

The trip was started at 10.08 and finished at 1.52. Preliminary to the start the gas tank was emptied and a measure certified to as a one-gallon can by the sealer of weights and measures was filled with gasoline, and it was poured into the tank. This was absolutely all the gas which could be furnished to the motor, and that it should go the distance that it did is really an excellent performance.

In order that there should be no question as to the correctness of the odometer, it was twice checked up on the city course on Beacon street, and in both instances found correct.

The best previous record was that of forty-six miles to the gallon, created on the Long Island course a year ago, but this was unofficial. Two years ago forty-six miles on a gallon was secured by a four-cylinder motor, but until Friday that mark had never been equalled or excelled. The correctness of the performance, the distance traveled and the amount of gasoline is certified to by both of the observers.

Better Tires and Lower Prices

"The development of 'plantation rubber,' which in the past few years has not only brought down crude rubber prices, but changed the world's basic supply, has had a marked effect on the tire-making industry," says an official of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company. "This in turn has worked an advantage to tire users and the whole automobile industry.

"Four or five years ago Brazil produced most of the world's high-grade crude rubber supply, and the price per pound was steadily rising. It reached $2 a pound in 1910, and the supply was not nearly up to the demand. Crude rubber has recently been as low as sixty cents per pound. Recently there has been a little rise, but indications are that the trend will be gradually downward for some time until a rock-bottom price, on the basis of a full development of the plantation system, has been reached.

"As a result of all this, the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, which reduced its tire prices gradually as crude rubber came down, is now supplying the trade a much better tire, at a much lower price, than a few years ago. For all through the changes of the industry Goodyear has striven at all times to make its tire better in quality. This policy is vindicated by the fact that Goodyear sales in 1913 amounted to $33,000,000, at a profit of 6½ per cent. on that volume."

The Massachusetts Highway Commission has revoked the automobile license of Thomas F. Fahey of Peabody, who was convicted last week at Taunton of operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor.

New Model of the Cole Car Is Here

The Latest of the Standardized Line a Beauty.

A brand new light and low priced model known as the Ten Four Cole has arrived at the salesrooms of the Cole Motor Car Company. The car retains all the parts of the Cole "standardization roll of honor" and is an improvement in many respects over the series 9 four cylinder machine.

Charles S. Crawford, chief engineer of the factory, writes to the local representatives to say, "Without attacking any of the vital parts of the Cole four cylinder car this department has been able to make the model Ten Four Cole lighter by more than 200 pounds. In our tests over give and take roads the new model with the Stewart-Warner vacuum gasolene control developed extraordinary fuel economy. I am prepared to tell you that the average automobile owner should easily get an average of seventeen miles to the gallon of gasolene on the new model."

The car is the first to adopt the vacuum control, described as a radically new type of gasolene feed, which obviously increases fuel efficiency, especially in connection with the lighter weight of the car. Side lights have been removed and double bulb front lights replace them. This feature fully complies with the "dimmer" law that is becoming effective everywhere over the country.

Leaves to Compete in Foreign Event

Paul J. C. Derkum of Los Angeles, winner of the sensational 450-mile motorcycle race across the California-Arizona Desert from San Diego to Phoenix, and one of the most brilliant riders in the country, sailed on the Mauretania Tuesday, accompanied by his wife, to compete in the great International Tourist Trophy road race, to be held in the Isle of Man, May 21.

Derkum will be the sole American representative, and will have an American mount, an Indian, also the only Yankee product in the race.

NO TIRE TROUBLE.

After traveling more than 1,000 miles over all sorts of highways between Portland, Ore., and Los Angeles, Cal., Mr. and Mrs. Melville Carson Hammack finished their honeymoon trip with Oregon air in all four tires of their Studebaker "Four."

EXPORTATION OF MOTOR VEHICLES

Interesting Statistics Prepared by Board of Commerce.

Exports of American automobiles, motor trucks and motorcycles now almost double in value the exports of all other kinds of vehicles combined, including railroad and street cars, as shown by a comparison of government figures made by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. For the eight months ending with February, 1914, the total value of motor vehicles, automobile engines, tires and parts and motorcycles was $23,337,332. During the same period the exports of all other vehicles and parts amounted to $12,529,844, exclusive of steam locomotives. Adding locomotives brings the total roughly to $15,000,000. This includes railroad and street car rolling stock, wagons, carriages, aeroplanes, bicycles and tricycles.

Our exports of motor vehicles have increased steadily, while imports are decreasing rapidly. For the eight months' periods ending with February, 1912, 1913 and 1914, we exported respectively 12,347 motor vehicles worth $12,000,000, 14,488 worth $14,852,000 and 16,883 worth $15,716,000. During the same periods we imported 717 motor vehicles valued at $4,572,000, 569 valued at $1,329,000 and 230 worth $529,000.

Government reports show that exports of automobiles from the port of New York during March, 1914, were 38 per cent ahead of those of February, 2,479 cars being shipped as compared with 1,797 in February and 1,841 in January. The total value of vehicles and parts shipped in March, exclusive of engines and tires, was $2,204,288.

THE WEIGHT OF GASOLINE.

A gallon of 64 gasoline weighs one-half ounce more than six pounds. If it weighs more than that it is not as good as 64-test gasoline. 74 gasoline weighs five pounds and twelve ounces to the gallon.

GALVIN SEES RETRIBUTION RAPIDLY OVERTAKING CARSON FOR ULSTER WAR PROMOTION

Predicts Nationalist Boycott Against Tory Merchants of Belfast.

By C. O'CONNELL GALVIN.

[illegible] and as steadily as the [illegible] of the tides [illegible] and his fellow promoters of [illegible] war [illegible] the course [illegible] with the government [illegible] permit [illegible] a halt to [illegible] of [illegible].

For two years [illegible] amazement of watching [illegible] the English government has been pursuing [illegible] with regard to [illegible] policy of [illegible]. This attitude [illegible] Premier Asquith and his associates of the ministry, not by [illegible] of [illegible] of Carson's wild [illegible] wilder acts, but rather [illegible] leader might have [illegible] just how far he really [illegible] to go in his campaign [illegible] not. In plain words, [illegible] to be given all the rope [illegible] with the ghastly result [illegible] certain.

[illegible] taken the rope. And [illegible] is beautifully tangled up [illegible] not only of his own [illegible] self, but also of the leaders [illegible] are unfortunate enough to be [illegible] his red campaign.

GOVERNMENT'S NEXT MOVE.

It will be the government's move [illegible]. The [illegible] the guns and ammunition the [illegible] it will be up to the military and police [illegible] and file of his dupes, there is no question in the mind of ministerial London as to the coming fate of Carson. He will be lucky to escape disbarment, and [illegible] will be doubly lucky if his name is not stricken from every club in London to which he belongs. His dismissal from the King's Privy Council is a certainty.

With such penalties as these meted out to the uncrowned King of Belfast, he will be as isolated as though he were marooned on a barren rock in mid-Atlantic.

Then, if the fires of fanatical hate which have been fanned by this man, should begin to redden the sky above Belfast with too great a glare, the whole city of Belfast will be placed under martial law, with the taxpayers facing a nice daily bill for the maintenance of the military and the extra police.

EXPECTS BOYCOTT.

On top of all this will undoubtedly be organized a boycott throughout Nationalist Ireland—more than seven-eighths of the country—against those merchants of Belfast who are aiding and financing the Carson brigade, so that, taking it all in all and in the long run, Carsonism will be found to be the costliest toy Belfast has played with in recent years.

Those who will have to pay the [illegible] for all this merry dancing of [illegible] play will be in no mood a year from now to sit at banquets in Carson's honor and toast his glorious, pious and immortal memory.

Some people have been grafting to beat the band up there in loyal and patriotic Belfast. Who they are and how they have divided the cash will, one of these days, make a mighty interesting story. It is now known that, within a few years, no less than [illegible] has been put up by the noble landlords, the whiskey distillers and porter brewers and the Tories of England, like the Dukes of Norfolk, Marlboro, Lansdowne, the Marquis of Abercorn and Lord Londonderry, and the rest of the titled crowd of privilege, to defeat home rule.

HOW FUNDS WERE SPENT.

All this money, of course, has not gone into the purchase of arms and munitions of war. A lot of it went into the promotion of motion picture shows, showing the Carson battalions in review and on the march, etc., a good deal of the cash was spent on press agency work, not only in Ireland and England but in America, [illegible] Canada. Cabling long [illegible] the Carson rising naturally [illegible] deeply into the war fund; but [illegible] these huge expenditures [illegible] slice of the $10,000,000 remains [illegible] account for. There is not [illegible] danger that any of the chief [illegible] of the Carson standard will end their days in the poorhouse.

Greatly to the discomfiture of the Tory-Orange leaders in the Westminster Parliament, a clever journalist, whose memory goes back to the disestablishment fight of Mr. Gladstone's first premiership has brought to light the following interesting story of Orange super-loyalty to the throne about which the world hears so much from various sources at the present hour:

King George will undoubtedly side with his Cabinet and support the Liberal party when it comes to the final test of putting his signature to the Home Rule bill. All talk about his exercising his shadowy right to dissolve Parliament and call a general election is sheer nonsense. The traditions of his family are against anything of the sort, and what is more his father and his grandmother before him owed nothing to the Orange faction which is the backbone of the anti-Home Rule movement.

BITTER ON ORANGEMEN.

When William IV. died the Orangemen of that day sought to oppose the accession of Queen Victoria to the throne on the ground that the Salic law had been introduced into England with the Hanoverian dynasty, and they went so far as to openly advocate the giving the crown to the Duke of Cumberland.

Queen Victoria neither forgave nor forgot things like that, so when the Prince of Wales, afterwards King Edward VII., made his famous tour of Canada and part of the United States in 1860, the Duke of Newcastle, who was sent with him by the Queen as his mentor, was instructed to prevent the Canadian Orangemen from holding any demonstrations in his honor.

The Prince of Wales went up from Montreal to Toronto by boat and at two different points along the north shore of the lake the Duke of Newcastle ordered the boat to sail on and refused to allow the Prince of Wales to land because the landing stage was filled with men wearing Orange regalia. This was a bitter pill for the Canadian Orangemen to swallow.

FRESH INJURY RESENTED.

The next stage in the quarrel between Her Majesty and her 'loyal' subjects in Ulster was in 1868 when the question of church disestablishment was exciting the people of Ireland. In that election campaign the Rev Dr R. R. Kane, a prominent Belfast Orangeman, threatened to kick Queen Victoria's crown into the Boyne if the Irish Church was disestablished.

For years after that Queen Victoria refused to receive at court or meet in any social way certain members of the British aristocracy and one or two clergymen of high rank in the Established Church who had been identified in any way with this agitation. King George will bear these historical facts in mind when petitions are presented to him asking him to dismiss his Ministers instead of signing this bill.

The revival of this interesting bit [illegible] utter mockery of the loyal pretensions [illegible] triumph, the chief feature of its progress [illegible] self-control of the [illegible] Irish Nationalism [illegible] ries has been reached. There will be no severance of any of the Irish counties.

If the Lords put in an amendment making the excluded counties permanent in their exclusion, the clause will be rejected by the Commons and the bill will become law as it stands today.

Orlov Wants to See Fellow-Travelers

Youth in American's St. Louis Trip Plans Reunion.

Nathaniel Orlov, who was one of the lucky schoolboys to win a trip to the St Louis fair in a competition for popular schoolboys, run by the Boston AMERICAN in the Spring of 1904, is very desirous of getting in touch with the other members of the party with the idea of having a reunion and celebrating the tenth anniversary of the trip. Twenty schoolboys were sent to the fair as the guests of William Randolph Hearst and the majority of them, Orlov believes, are still located in Boston. Orlov lives at No. 14 Harold street, Roxbury, and would like to have the other members of the 1904 St. Louis fair party send their addresses to him as soon as possible.

Coughlin told the court that he was not fighting but was trying to take Cronin home, but that he didn't want to go. They shook hands and walked out, arm in arm.

TEST CASES CONDEMN CURE OF FRIEDMANN

Physician Says Curative and Preventive Powers Are Lacking.

PATIENTS ARE WATCHED

WASHINGTON, May 2.—After observing patients who had been treated with Dr. Fredrich F. Friedmann's vaccine for fourteen months Dr Mannheimer of New York declared here today that this so-called cure for tuberculosis has exhibited neither curative nor preventive powers.

"In March, 1913," said Dr Mannheimer, "eighteen patients were treated under my supervision. Of these fifteen can be followed up, and of that number, three are dead. The number of injections in these cases were one, two and four respectively. Of the remainging twelve patients, ten received one, and two received four injections.

"Five of the ten patients who received one injection developed abscesses at the site of the injection and were therefore, unsuitable for further injections, according to the inventor. The other five patients were not reinjected, either because they did not see the improvement they had been led to expect or because they had become worse and had lost confidence in Friedmann. As to their present condition, five of them are now unchanged and five are worse than a year ago.

"One patient who had four injections feels well and presents signs of an arrested lung-process, but he has not gained in weight and has developed a new tuberculous process in another part of the body. The second patient with four injections has tuberculosis of the knee-joint and is now decidedly worse than before. The infiltrate of the fourth injection broke down and discharged pus.

"Where abscesses resulted at the site of the first injection, the vaccine apparently produced no additional harmful effect. The disease remained uninfluenced. Friedmann neglected to prevent abscess-formation, although he claimed to know how. To be very charitable, one might judge from one single case, that decided natural healing tendencies, aided by common-sense treatment, will not be hindered by the remedy.

"When in a quiescent case the first subjective and objective symptoms of a new outbreak appear and one naturally wishes to check it, the remedy is absolutely worthless for that purpose. It cannot prevent the tendency to spread, if a case is so disposed. The method of its administration has been anything but careful and intelligent. For these reasons, and on account of the absence of curative and preventive powers, it cannot be recommended."

Miss O'Hanley Bride of John J. Walsh

Pastors in Sermons Today to Appeal for Co-operation in All Sections of City.

Greater Boston's clean-up campaign opens today. In many churches the pastors will urge men, women and children to unite in a week's concerted war on dirt and disease, flies and mosquitoes. Yesterday rabbis asked their congregations to join in, and through the West End marched 1,500 children, who formed the vanguard of the anti-dirt crusaders.

"No quarters" is the slogan of the campaigners. Thousands of school children have enlisted.

In the homes housewives will be asked to do their share towards making Boston a real "spotless town." Everything is to be made spick and span, scrubbing brushes, brooms, paint, oil, soap and water will be the weapons and ammunitions. Germs, flies and mosquitoes will be attacked on all sides—cellars, backyards, attics and sheds will be invaded in an effort to annihilate the "enemy."

Ample provisions have been made to care for the hundreds of tons of rubbish which will be collected. It will be carted away in the dumps by the city wagons.

The movement is endorsed by the Boston Chamber of Commerce, the Massachusetts State Board of Trade, the New England Hardware Dealers' Association, the Wholesale Grocers' Association, the Paint and Oil Club of New England, the Pilgrim Publicity Association, the Boston Women's Publicity Club, Women's Municipal League and other organizations.

The children's parade started at the Charlesbank Playgrounds and moved from Charles to Poplar streets, through Chambers, and Green streets, Bowdoin square, Chardon, Causeway, Leverett, Spring, Allen, Chambers and back to Charles street, where the boys and girls disbanded in front of the Elizabeth Peabody House.

The children carried hundreds of big signs advertising the purpose of the campaign. Along the route thousands greeted them and loudly pledged their assistance in the crusade.

John P. Whitman, chairman of the Wards 8 and 10 clean-up and paint-up committee, was in charge of the arrangements for the march.

CONTROL BOARD BATTLE TUESDAY

Rhode Island House to Vote on Question of Eliminating the Commission.

PROVIDENCE, May 2.—The House of Representatives will on Tuesday decide the question of eliminating the State Board of Contract and Supply, which has tied up the Legislature and aroused its members to a fighting pitch. Some of the wiseacres predict that the House will vote to end the trouble, but the Governor maintains that his wishes will be complied with and that the board will be granted the added authority he has asked for, despite the fact that the Assembly has twice turned down his recommendations.

Minority Leader West succeeded in introducing a resolution at the closing hour Friday that means the elimination of the Control Board if it is passed. While Governor Pothier insists that the board shall have the $420,000 appropriation as well as unrestrained liberty in spending nearly $500,000 in State bonds, the House Finance Committee will not budge from its stand until the members know how the money is to be expended.

Advanced contracts to the amount of thousands of dollars are charged against the Control Board.

All sorts of attempted trades having failed, members of the finance committee say they will stick to their decision if the Assembly does not adjourn all Summer.

While it is acknowledged that inmates of State institutions are in a deplorable condition, it is pointed out that $10,000 piggeries do not directly help the suffering inmates. The threat of the Governor that an investigation must follow, does not alarm the majority of the members.

IF LEFT $120,000 TO SPEND IN YEAR, WOULD YOU DO IT?

Just What Would You Do if Such Provision Was Made in a Will?

What would you do after arriving at the age of fifty if you were left $120,000, with these provisions?

You must spend that sum in one year.

You must spend it like a man of fashion about town.

You must not marry within this time.

All that is required of you will be to have a good time, like many other men, who have been left independent means.

What would you do?

This question is based upon the plot of a novel called "Fool of April," by Justin Huntley McCarthy and published by John Lane Company.

Here is one reply, sent in by Albert Hardy of No. 353 Main street, Springfield:

I would not invest the money; I would simply place it on deposit, drawing it as required.

I would have made me only such clothes as would be required of a man of fashion, and no more shoes than I needed.

My expenses would be $100 per day, independent of incidentals.

Not being accustomed to a valet, I would not know what to do with one.

I would live in a small, but elegant, up-to-date city apartment, employ one Japanese servant, hear the best music, see the best plays and entertain a small circle of congenial friends.

Get your wits a-going.

Give the best answer for the pleasures for a man around town after arriving at the age of fifty, the critical age for new ideas of life.

7 IN FIELD FOR NEW HAMPSHIRE GOVERNORSHIP

Four Republicans and Three Democrats Out to Succeed Felker.

CONCORD, N. H., May 2.—Three Democrats and four Republicans are being boomed for Governor of New Hampshire, and there is sure to be a lively contest at the primaries.

Governor Samuel D. Felker, the first Democrat to hold the highest office in the State in years, has announced that he will not be a candidate for re-election. It is believed that Felker is lining up his forces for the United States senatorship. He covets the seat now occupied by Senator Jacob H. Gallinger.

Republican friends are booming Secretary of State Edward N. Pearson for Governor, and it is believed that Gallinger will have a fight on his hands within the ranks of his own party to retain his seat.

DEMOCRATS IN FIELD.

The Democratic candidates for Governor are:

Albert W. Noone, Portsmouth, a member of the Governor's Council.

John B. Jameson, Concord, chairman of the Democratic State Committee.

Senator James C. Hutchins of North Stratford.

Republicans who are being boomed are:

Former Representative Rosecrans W. Pillsbury of Londonderry.

Deputy Sheriff Holman A. Drew of Concord, Harry K. Thaw's guard.

Former Representative Roland H. Spaulding of Rochester.

Councillor Noone has announced his platform. He advocates the full dinner pail, conservation and development for the benefit of the people, efficiency and economy, equal taxation, woman's suffrage if the people want it and veneration for the flag.

It is said that Chairman Jameson would be more acceptable to the present administration than Senator Hutchins and more acceptable to the Hollis-Stevens faction than Noone. Jameson is said to be ambitious to become New Hampshire's next Governor.

Senator Hutchins made his entry into the gubernatorial contest about two weeks ago. He is strong in the north country, where he lives.

A hot fight is expected in the Democratic ranks over the United States Senatorship. Senator Hollis is said to be backing the candidacy of Congressman Stevens of Landoff, who will be an opponent of Governor Felker.

Former Representative Spaulding and former Representative Emerson have been looking over the political battle ground and are likely to be candidates for the Republican nomination for Governor.

It is understood that Spaulding has received many offers of support from Republicans to enter the race against Pillsbury, who is so far the only announced candidate. Spaulding is a good political campaigner and capable of giving Pillsbury a hard fight. The State committee will probably try to limit the field to two candidates so as to solidify the support. Spaulding has had more experience in political affairs than Emerson, although he is not so well known in the lower part of the State as the Milford man.

HORSE SHOW FOR CHARITY.

To raise funds for charitable purposes a horse show will be given in the Brookline Riding School next Saturday.

BOSTON WATER POLLUTED, SAY TOWN OFFICIALS

Metropolitan Supply Tainted by West Boylston Shack Dwellers, Warn Board.

That the million or more people of Boston and suburban towns who use water from the Metropolitan water system's basin in Worcester County, are drinking daily a large amount of polluted water, is the statement issued by the West Boylston Improvement Society. The fact that water, full of disease germs, is flowing into the big Metropolitan basin, between West Boylston, Clinton and Sterling, in Worcester County, has been made known to the State Board of Health as well as those at the head of the Metropolitan system, by officials of West Boylston.

The polluted water is fed to the Metropolitan basin by a brook, which has its starting point at the Worcester city line, from which point it winds through the town to the big reservoir. In the southerly part of West Boylston, just over the Worcester city line, is a settlement of shacks and huts in a swampy section.

The water of the little brook is used by dwellers of the shacks for family washing. Blind drains have [illegible] but the remnants of offal fed to pigs, [illegible]

[illegible] INTO THE BIG BASIN.

All of these impurities find there way directly to the swift flowing brook [illegible] other rubbish, along with countless disease germs, find there way into this little brook, say the officials of West Boylston.

On a tour of the district, complaint against which had been made to the State Board of Health, the town officials and the members of the West Boylston Improvement Society found conditions even worse than reported. In one little shack, composed of a kitchen and a bedroom, was found five children and their father, all ill, as a result of dampness and unhealthy surroundings. The so-called cellar of this house, which contained rubbish of all kinds, was flooded with water, which drips through the walls into the brook.

Just a few feet to the south of the house was found an outhouse, a drain from which led directly to the little feeder of the Metropolitan water system basin. Within a stone's throw were found pigpens, and an open drain, the later filled with dirty water, through which could be seen castoff clothes, soiled rags and rubbish.

Water taken from the brook in this district was badly discolored, a condition, according to members of the West Boylston Board of Health, which prevailed in water taken nearer the basin.

MAKE TEST OF WATER.

Traveling to the north towards the reservoir, conditions were found still worse. At various sections of the brook water has been taken by the West Boylston Improvement Society and sent to the chemistry departments of the Worcester colleges, to determine the amount of actual poisonous germs contained therein.

According to physicians, there are enough germs in a glass full of polluted water to cause an epidemic of disease. The improvement society, beside appealing for help to the State Board of Health and water board, have sent out warning of conditions to the heads of the board of health in each town and city in the Metropolitan water system.

End Pentecostal Convention Today

More than 200 converts to the pentacostal faith will attend a breakfast and service in the First Pentacostal Church, No. 1 East Lenox street, this morning. The service will bring to an end a convention which has been held during the week. The Rev. William Gilman, pastor, said yesterday that during the week 550 meals had been given to poor families, ten unemployed had been given positions and fifty pairs of shoes and twenty-five suits of clothes had been distributed among the worthy class.

Attaches Elephant's Side in $200 Suit

GENE—Well, young gesundheit, what are you and who are you doing here?

WILLIE—Oh, I just came off from the bullage.

GENE—The bullage? You mean the steerage.

WILLIE—Well, all same animal. What's difference?

GENE—Where are your papers?

WILLIE—I don't smoke, but here's a bunch coupons.

GENE—You're pretty fresh, aren't you?

WILLIE—Fresh! Say, in my country that would be an insult.

GENE—Well! W-e-l-l!!

WILLIE—But I'm not in my country.

GENE—Say, do you know to whom you are talking to? I'm the inspector here, and a son of Uncle Sam.

WILLIE—Oh, you're a son of your Uncle Sam? You must be your own cousin.

GENE—Look here. It's useless for you to try to evade the emigrant laws.

WILLIE—Oh, that's all right. I know her very well.

GENE—Who do you know?

WILLIE—Emma Grant.

GENE—Come, now; what have you to declare?

WILLIE—I'm all right.

GENE—Whaddyamean all right?

WILLIE—I declare I'm all right.

GENE—Get out your trunks.

WILLIE—Are we going in swimming?

GENE—No, no. Not swimming trunks. I mean I have to put a duty on your trunks.

WILLIE—I don't see for why?

GENE—It's my duty.

WILLIE—Oh, I thought that went to the Government.

GENE—It does.

WILLIE—You just said it was your duty.

GENE—Never mind, now; you've got to pay or you can't stay in the country.

WILLIE—Well, to tell the truth, Mr. Expector, I would rather stay in the city. I don't like the country.

GENE—Get your money ready.

WILLIE—This is a regular street car, huh? Pay as you enter. I thought this was a free country.

GENE—It is free. Every man here is equal.

WILLIE—Yes, equal to anything.

GENE—You seem to be a bright sort of chap. Some day you may get a chance to become a great man.

WILLIE—I am afraid of these games of chance.

GENE—Have you any relatives here?

WILLIE—I have several twin brothers.

GENE—Are they naturalized?

WILLIE—One is. The other has a glass eye.

GENE—Are you married?

WILLIE—No. In business for myself.

GENE—What kind of a girl would you like to marry?

WILLIE—Oh, she must be beautiful, educationed, have a fine figure—in the bank—and so on——

GENE—Well, and so on, what?

WILLIE—And sew on buttons, of course.

GENE—Why, a girl like that would be crazy to marry you.

WILLIE—Oh, she can be crazy, too. Nuts are nutritious.

GENE—What was your occupation in the old country?

WILLIE—I used to look after the horses.

GENE—Stable boy?

WILLIE—Another insult. No. I would stand on the corner and watch the horses go by. Then, as they passed down the street, I would look after them.

GENE—Are you a good judge of horseflesh?

WILLIE—Yes, but I like beefsteak better.

GENE—Go in there and wait on the dock for me.

WILLIE—The doc? He's not my boss. Let him wait on himself.

Our Garden Patch

Garden Fever.

It Is Prevalent This Time of Year. The Symptoms Are Hallucinations Concerning Immense Home-Grown Vegetables and Rare Blossoms, Accompanied by an Itching to Get Out in the Back Yard and Plant Everything Pictured in the Seed Catalogue.

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

HAVE you a little Seed-book in your home?

We will wager a printed lecture by our so-called Secretary of State against a cracked flower pot that you have.

And if you have the seed-book, otherwise known as a seed catalogue, it is like taking a news story from a press agent to wager further that you have read it and marked 287 of the 302 varieties of flowers and vegetables depicted between its covers, which you have decided to grow in your little twelve and a half by seventeen back yard.

Some call it "putterin' round." Others, who have less money but more inclination to put on "side," speak of it as "beautifying my estate." But it hits all of them, this garden fever.

The symptoms of garden fever are numerous. They may be classed as follows

FIRST WARM DAY—Sniffing the air, looking for robins, letting the furnace fire go out (and building the fire again at sunset).

SECOND WARM DAY—Collecting seed catalogues.

EVENING OF SECOND WARM DAY—Reading seed catalogue from the Latin name for the Swedish rose depicted on the front cover to the price of fertilizer by carload lots quoted on the back cover.

THIRD WARM DAY—A resolution to plant everything in the seed catalogue with the exception of the garden implements.

THIRD WARM EVENING—Marking nine-tenths of the flowers and vegetables in the catalogue, adding up the cost of seeds for same, and reducing the order at once 98 per cent.

FOURTH WARM DAY—Visiting seed man's emporium and waiting your turn among fifty other garden fever victims to be waited on. Making sundry purchases.

After this the symptoms come thick and fast, and your garden fever is at its height. Now come the hallucinations concerning tomatoes as large as pumpkins, pumpkins as large as hogsheads, roses that make American Beauties and Jacks look like dandelions, lettuce as big as palmetto palm leaves and strawberries the size of beets and the color of the Harrison Fisher girl's lips. In your visions you not only behold these things, but you have a mental picture of them growing in your little home-made, hand-made garden.

REMEDY FOR GARDEN FEVER.

Once you come down with garden fever you cannot check it until you have exhibited all these symptoms.

After studying seed catalogues and buying enough seeds to plant a ten-acre farm for your little back yard, and spending every night for a week mapping out your garden, until your plans look like an income tax blank, you may begin the cure.

First, open up the cellar bulkhead and let it drop on your thumb. Try again, and prop it up with the spading fork.

Now go down and bring out the hoe.

Finding that you cannot hoe the garden until the ground is loosened up, go back down cellar and bring up the rake. After looking everywhere for it, including the attic and all the closets, you will find it up over the steam pipes. Taking the rake out, you will discover that you need the spading fork first of all, so you rush back down cellar again, rather petulantly, and search half an hour, blame your wife and everyone else for giving it away to the ash man, and finally see it in the bulkhead. Snatch it up hastily, forgetting that it is propping up the bulkhead door. This allows the door to fall over and smash in your new Spring derby. Then you hunt up a soft cap and begin spading.

Your garden plot measures twenty feet by thirty-six feet. You know this because you measured it with friend wife's new tape measure and lost it. At the end of the first hour your garden plot is 48x156 feet. At the end of the second hour, having spaded up seven rows, your garden plot is half a mile wide by a mile and a quarter long, and you begin to wonder where you can get a steam traction plow to finish the job.

At this point the garden fever is abating.

The next afternoon you telephone Joe to go over and spade your garden plot, explaining that business keeps you in town. Finding the plot nicely spaded, you proceed to do your planting.

You put in ten rows of beans, five rows of lettuce and fill up the last space with radishes. Then your wife saunters out and asks you where the tomatoes, cucumbers, sweet corn, squash, beets, turnips, celery and really worth-while vegetables are planted.

Not daring to admit you have overlooked these, you do not tell her, but later surreptitiously dig up most of your beans and plant some of these things.

THE CURE.

At the end of the third afternoon of kneeling in the damp soil, you retire, proud of yourself and your work. The next morning you have nine kinds of rheumatism in your legs, ankles, hips, back, neck, arms and other portions of your anatomy and your interest in the garden begins to sag and sag, until it finally breaks apart and drifts away.

THE RELAPSE.

But this insidious garden fever always brings a relapse. It comes several weeks after the amateur gardener is certain he is cured. It is caused by the sight of little broken and straggling rows of green things popping up out of the ground.

Then you really pity Luther Burbank and regard him as a sort of piker in this garden game, and begin to watch things grow.

You count eleven radish plants and thirty tender young beans, the beans with the split bean seeds clinging to the leaf. The next morning twenty-nine of the beans have fallen. Half of those merely toppled over flat because cut worms ate the stems off. The other half are scattered about. A neighbor's hens pulled them up trying to pick the beans off the leaves.

On the following morning your tomato plants have all lain down flat. Several large cream-white slugs with orange-hued heads are responsible for this.

All this makes you convalescent. It also makes you forget your early training and piety and everything else except your vocabulary of wild-oats days, and you stroll into the kitchen and make remarks that drive your wife upstairs and cause the kalsomine to peel off the walls.

Your Spring fever is now practically cured.

The next week your wife goes down to the ten-cent store and pays 45 cents for seeds and putters around that garden until, the first you know it is a thriving patch.

THE RESULT.

The result of all this is that along in July, when you are having green peas and string beans and lettuce and radishes and tomatoes out of this garden, you take your city visitors out and say:

"What do you think of MY garden?"

The College Girl and the Florist.

A BOSTON florist tells of a college girl who came to him with a request for flowers to be placed in two large windows.

"They must be red and blue," said she. Then, after a critical survey of the blooms displayed in the shop, she added: "That of lobelias will do very nicely. How much are there?"—pointing to some flaming geraniums.

"Fifteen cents each, four for fifty cents," said the florist. "Very fine geraniums, miss."

The college girl shot a glance of pity at him. Then, very delicately, as if not to wound his feelings by the correction, she said.

"I will take a dozen of your best gerania."

He Was Talking to God.

MRS. WATKINS was entertaining some week-end guests not long ago, when they were startled by a commotion [redacted].

"Mercy! What's that awful profanity downstairs?" whispered one of the guests in a frightened tone.

"Don't be alarmed, my dear," replied the hostess. "It's my husband. He's come in late and fallen over the new Persian prayer rug."

The Cracker and the Train.

In certain of the Southern States there abound in the mountain regions the poorest and most ignorant of all white inhabitants of this country, namely, the "crackers." Many of these people, in their homes, have never seen a railway train; and when one of them does penetrate into the more settled districts of his State he is always more appalled by such a sight than anything else brought to his notice.

In this relation a Southern railway man tells a story of a "cracker" from the mountains of Georgia who chanced to be present at the opening of a branch line into a section not before served by the railway. This "cracker," on a horse, was riding along the track, when suddenly he heard behind him a strange and novel sound—that of a locomotive whistle. The "cracker" soon began to show signs of distress. His restiveness increased rapidly as the train approached, until, when the roar and blanket of dust from the sliding wheels enveloped him, he rose in his stirrups, scared half to death.

The engineer, taking in the situation, leaned out of his cab window just as the train stopped, and shouted at the top of his lungs: "Get out of the way, you onery cracker; I'm goin' to turn around!"

That was hint enough for the "cracker." Slapping his spurs into the flanks of his horse, he was over the hills in a twinkle. The last seen of him was a little gray ball on the farthest horizon.

Why She Wept.

APROPOS of the numerous influential malefactors whose prison terms are either annulled or cut down to nearly nothing, Mayor Brand Whitlock, of Toledo, said a short while [redacted]

"Is it a good thing for the public to let these men out so soon?

"I was sympathizing one afternoon with a poor woman whose husband had just been sent to jail. She was weeping bitterly, and I said to her:

"'Now, don't take it so hard. Two years is a long sentence, I know; but he may not have to serve it all. Convicts who behave themselves oftentimes get out months before their appointed time.'

"'That's just it,' she replied, still sobbing. 'Henry can be an angel when he likes.'"

Club Periodicals.

A COMMERCIAL traveler, whose territory includes the State of South Carolina, where there is in force the dispensary system, tells of the "clubs" that flourish there, "clubs" where thirsty souls from other parts may, after certain formalities, obtain their liquid refreshments.

In this relation the drummer relates his encounter with a dusky attendant in one such club.

"What have you," he was asked, "in the shape of periodicals?"

"Corn liquor, suh," was the immediate response, "beer an' wine, but mostly corn liquor, suh."

A Fair Offer.

It was at the moving picture show. In front sat a young woman, very pretty and modishly costumed, with her son, a youngster of perhaps six years. Just behind sat a young man—a good-looking young man—a well-dressed young man. The young man watched the young woman very much more closely than he did the screen across the stage.

For the first quarter of an hour he did not dare to speak to her. But she was so attractive that he cudgelled his brains for some excuse to begin a conversation. At last he bit upon the idea of pretending he was a stranger—a foreigner—in need of information. He leaned over and said in his best French:

"Pardon, madame, may I address a few words to you?"

The six-year-old escort turned around with a courteous inclination of his curly head.

"If you wish, sir," said he, "I will translate for you. My mother does not understand French."

The Wrong Prescription.

A PHILADELPHIA physician was referring to the humorous phases of the practise of medicine when he was reminded of the sad case of a patient who came to him suffering from hay fever.

"Now, it is a fact," said the doctor, "that in hay fever there is no absolutely infallible treatment. The sending of one patient to a certain climate may result in relief which would not come in the case of another patient. As a rule, I advise the sufferer to take a sea trip. The man of whom I speak, a large, fine-looking chap, was suffering from hay fever in its most aggravated form. I offered the usual suggestion that he take a trip at sea.

"He gave me a look of disgust and prepared to depart. 'Doggode id!' he exclaimed. 'I'b dee capdid of ad ocean tider. I lib ad sea!'"

Taking the Risk.

A GANG of laberers was employed digging a mysterious ditch across the street. It was a sewer or a place to put a gas pipe or something.

One man in particular was working as if he were a chorus man in a play—just going through the motions and pretending to dig a ditch. The foreman came along and spoke to him.

"Don't be afraid," he said with rich sarcasm. "Lean on th' shovel now an' thin. If it breaks I'll pay for it."

Each Married for the Other's Money, But Neither Had a Cent

A Funny Scene from "MARRYING MONEY"

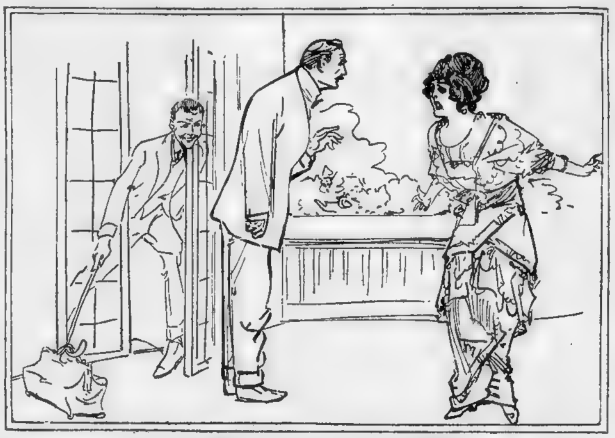
TED VANDERPOEL, Distant cousin of the wealthy Vanderpoel family, penniless clerk in a law office.
JIMMY SWEENEY..................His chum
FRANK SAVILLE..................Friend of both
MILDRED NILES........Daughter of a financier
MRS. NILES, Who is determined her daughter shall marry money.
LYMAN NILES, Who wants to know more about Ted
ARCHIE VANDERPOEL...Who really has money
MRS. VANDERPOEL...His mother, a social leader



"Stop them! Millie has eloped with this impostor—this"——

TED—You fellows just came in the nick of time

FRANK—What's up?

JIMMIE—You didn't spill the beans!

TED—No; she's going with me! She's a girl in a million

JIMMIE—She's a girl worth a million!

TED—She's just going to find the chauffeur. We're going to use their car.

SAVILLE—And it's a beauty, too. Cost them $8,000.

JIMMIE—Ted, you're great! Well, this certainly has been some day! I hope nothing goes wrong now.

SAVILLE—Where are you going?

TED—To Kingsford, New York. I know a parson there. Dr. Littlejohn.

JIMMIE—Where did you ever meet a parson?

TED—At my christening! Say, I've got something for you fellows to do for me.

JIMMIE—If we weren't doing something for you we wouldn't feel natural.

TED—I've got to meet Mildred at a garage right away. I wish you fellows would pack some things in my grip for me, and before that hand over some of your change.

JIMMIE—Would you mind repeating that first part—that last about handing over the change sort of scattered the rest.

TED—I'll send you a check for it.

JIMMIE—A rain check?

TED—No; I'm serious.

JIMMIE—Oh, you mean a trunk check.

TED—No, I don't; I mean a bank check.

JIMMIE—You wouldn't know a bank check if you saw one.

TED (counts money)—Thirteen—thirteen!

JIMMIE—That's twenty-six!

TED—I can't very well begin by asking my wife for money, can I?

SAVILLE—I would break it to her with a certain amount of delicacy.

TED—And in the meantime it's going to be very awkward to——

SAVILLE—To buy gasoline, sandwiches, marriage license, parsons and such frivolities.

TED—You see, Frank knows how to grasp things.

SAVILLE—I don't know so much about grasping, but speaking of loosening—will seventy-five help?

TED—Thank you so much, Frank——

JIMMIE—Don't make him blush!

SAVILLE—Don't speak of it. I look upon it as an investment.

TED—How much have you left, Jimmie?

JIMMIE—After careful economy, fifty dollars

TED—Slip me twenty of it. (Jimmie hands him florist's bill). I don't want Schanck's florist bill, either.

JIMMIE (replaces bill and hands Ted twenty dollars)—I never could put one over on you!

TED—Dear old Jimmie!

JIMMIE—Poor old Jimmie!

TED—I hate to leave you, old pal, but I can't take you on the honeymoon; it's simply not being done. Frank, you pack the grip, will you? Jimmie better come with me in case the Count turns up.

FRANK—Anything to oblige! Oh, don't forget to have the ring.

TED—That's so!

JIMMIE—Use this one!

TED—Where did you get that?

JIMMIE—At the five and ten cent store! Got it to-day downtown, in case of an emergency!

TED—All right! Thanks! Come on, Jimmie. (Ted and Jimmie exit).

MILDRED (enters)—Oh, Frank, where's Ted?

SAVILLE—He's just this minute gone to the garage! I'm about to pack his grip.

MILDRED—Sh! Here's mother!

SAVILLE—All right! (He exits).

(Enter Mrs. Niles).

MILDRED—Sh! It's all right, mother! Frank's packing Ted's grip and we're going right away.

MRS. NILES—But what are you going to wear?

MILDRED—You must pack a grip for me and we'll have the things from New York to meet us.

MRS. NILES—How are you going?

MILDRED—Why, Muzzy and father's car!

MRS. NILES—He'll be furious!

MILDRED—He'll be so, anyhow! You'll hurry the packing, won't you, and leave the grip out here so Ted can get it?

MRS. NILES—All right, dear

MILDRED—Good-by, mother!

MRS. NILES (starts to weep)—Good-by, dear, I hope it all turns out right.

MILDRED—It's sure to. Good-by, mother, good-by, dear. Don't cry, you'll have a headache. (Both exit).

(Enter Jimmie as Saville opens other door and appears with grip).

JIMMIE—Where are you going with the grip?

SAVILLE—Garage

JIMMIE—Why, you poor nut, everybody in the place will see you. Let's throw it over the porch—it's only a few feet to the ground. Why—wait a minute—you've got my suit case.

SAVILLE—Yes, but I've got Ted's things in it.

JIMMIE—That's your mistake and Ted's misfortune.

(They pull at grip—it bursts open and contents fall on the porch).

SAVILLE—Now see what you've done. Ted's toothbrush and his blooming puyguls.

JIMMIE—My toothbrush and my blooming puyguls.

SAVILLE—Why, how the dickens should I know your things.

JIMMIE—What else have you brought here?

SAVILLE—We haven't got time to take an inventory.

JIMMIE—Well, we're going to. Ted has one shoe, one sock, one handkerchief, three right-hand gloves, one gray tuxedo vest, one opera hat, one copy of Mark Twain's "Tramp Abroad." You're a fine little packer, you are—come, chuck them back in and I'll show you how to repack. (Jimmie exits).

BELLBOY (enters)—Did you ring, sir?

SAVILLE—What do you want?

BELLBOY—I came to see if the other Mr. Vanderpoel might look at this suite! The clerk made a mistake.

SAVILLE—Mr. Vanderpoel's not here now. They'll have to come some other time!

BELLBOY—I'll say so, sir. (Exits).

JIMMIE (enters)—Phew! That's done! Who was it, Frank?

SAVILLE—The other Mr. Vanderpoel! Wanted to look at this suite.

JIMMIE—Oh—Archie!

SAVILLE—Umh!

JIMMIE—That boob! His old nerve!

SAVILLE—Sh! I'll turn out the light! (They exit).

(Mrs. Vanderpoel and Archie are ushered in by the bellboy).

MRS. VANDERPOEL—I can't understand why our suite should be occupied.

ARCHIE—Is this it?

BELLBOY—That's Mr. Vanderpoel's suite, sir.

ARCHIE—Mr. Vanderpoel! Ha! Well, it's really ours, why should we ask his permission to go into it?

MRS. VANDERPOEL—But the place is dark and we can hardly break in, can we?

ARCHIE—I suppose not!

BELLBOY—Anything else I can do for you, sir?

ARCHIE—Yes! Tell the clerk he gave the suite to the wrong Mr. Vanderpoel!

BELLBOY—Yes! Then you're the right Mr. Vanderpoel?

ARCHIE—Go and do what I told you!

BELLBOY—Me for the wrong one!

ARCHIE—What did the beastly fellow say—I'll have him discharged. (Enter Gladys)

GLADYS—Hello, Auntie!

MRS VANDERPOEL—Gladys, dear, how are you?

GLADYS—I have been looking for you everywhere since you've had me paged.

MRS. VANDERPOEL—My dear, there has been the most dreadful muddle over our rooms. Oh, excuse me, you haven't met Archie, have you? This is my niece, Gladys Sutherland!

(During above lines Mrs. Niles comes out from her room with a travelling bag which she quietly places beside the door; she looks up and Gladys sees her).

GLADYS (to Archie)—How do you do, cousin. Oh, Mrs. Niles.

MRS. VANDERPOEL—How do you do?

MRS. NILES—We have been with your nephew all afternoon.

MRS. V.—This is my nephew.

MRS. NILES—Then you have more than one nephew.

GLADYS—Mrs. Niles means Theodore Vanderpoel, auntie; he's here with Mr. Sweeney.

MRS. V.—I don't know him and I'm sure that never in my life have I known a person called Sweeney. (Enter Niles. Sees bag.)

NILES—What is this? Millie's!

MRS. NILES—Wait, Lyman. Do I understand that Mr. Theodore Vanderpoel is no relation?

MRS. V.—Not that I know of.

ARCHIE—Oh, yes, I suppose he is. Sort of third or fourth cousin. Went to Harvard when I was there. Worked his way.

MRS. NILES—Worked his way?

ARCHIE—A bally waiter or something—never bothered to know him, of course. The last I heard he was working.

MRS. NILES—Working?

JIMMY—(Sneaks bag).

NILES—A Vanderpoel working! Well, what do you know about that?

ARCHIE—Yes, fancy — the idea—in a law office or something beastly—you remember the fellow, auntie—he was one of those persons in Uncle's will—one of those two thousand legatees.

MRS. NILES—$2,000? Is that all he has?

ARCHIE—Yes—he is practically penniless.

MRS. NILES—Penniless!

GLADYS—What a shame! Mildred seems so keen about him.

NILES—What do you think of your Vanderpoel now, eh?

JIMMIE (from doorway)—The beans are spilled!

(All hear the voice and turn. Jimmie ducks back. Mrs. Niles sees that Mildred's bag is gone and lets out a scream).

NILES—What's gone?

ARCHIE—What's the matter?

GLADYS—Are you ill?

MRS. VANDERPOEL—Really, this is most extraordinary.

MRS. NILES—The bag! The bag!

ALL—What bag?

MRS. NILES—Oh, Lyman, don't stand there like that! Do something. Do something!

NILES—Do? What do you want me to do?

MRS. NILES—Stop them! Millie has eloped with this impostor—this——

ALL—Eloped!

MRS. NILES—I packed the bag myself!

NILES—You——

MRS. VANDERPOEL—What an idea!

ARCHIE—Oh, I say!

NILES—You packed the bag yourself? How were they going?

MRS. NILES—In your car!

NILES—In my car? Of all the——

MRS. NILES—Oh, stop them! Stop them!

NILES—Stop them, well, I should say I would! (Starts and bumps into Archie.) Oh, I beg your pardon! (Continues on his way, bumps into the Count. Takes the Count by the nape of the neck, flings him towards Mrs. Niles.) Here's another one of your husbands. (Exits.)

DU SAC—Mon Dieu! What is all the excitement!

MRS. NILES—Oh, Sebastian! Give me your arm! Mildred and Mr. Vanderpoel are going to elope and I want you to help me find them.

DU SAC—Eloped! Sacre Bleu! Which way will we go?

MRS. NILES—Oh, dear! After all my plans! Let's go through the halls.

MRS. V.—My dear Gladys, what a vulgar display of low bred hysteria. We can't afford to be mixed up in this. Come, let us leave this hotel at once. (She exits.)

GLADYS—I hope they get away! They are crazy about each other. As long as she has money what does it matter?

ARCHIE—She hasn't a penny either. Lyman Niles went down with a big crash to-day. Of course, only those on the inside know of it yet. Let's go down and see the fun. Each after the other's money and neither worth a cent.

JUST FOR FUN

Not Enough.

HUSTLE NIT—This book says that that Bloomin' Frenchman Marat was stabbed while taking a bath.

Parkbench Daily—Is dat all be got fur it?

Unanimous.

NIGHT and day she lived in the hope,
That she'd find the sacred dope,
That would make men pine,
And say, "Be mine."
But they all said "Nope," just "Nope."

The Climax of a Giddy Whirl.

"WELL," mused six-year-old Harry, as he was being buttoned into a clean white suit, "this has been an exciting week, hasn't it, Mother. Monday we went to the Zoo, Wednesday I lost a tooth, Thursday was Lily's birthday party, Friday I was sick, yesterday I had my hair cut; and now here I am rushing off to Sunday School!"

Up to Them.

THERE was a jolly miller
Who didn't care a D
He never worked, but always sang
In voice 'way off the key
He drove the neighbors nearly mad,
They begged him in a flurry
To stop his noise, but still he sang
In discord, "I should worry."

The Unenlightened Goat.

"O MY dear daughter" (to a little girl of six), "you should not be frightened and run from the goat. Don't you know you are a Christian Scientist?"

"But, mamma" (excitedly), "the billy goat don't know it!"

At the Front.

THERE was a young woman named Pearl,
Who set the men's heads all a-whirl,
When she dressed in a flag,
They did one and all lag,
Awaiting for it to unfurl.

Cert.

THERE was a young woman named Gert,
Who put on a slit hobble skirt
The men rubbered so,
Where ever she'd go,
That necks by the hundred were hurt.

The Rewards of Virtue.

AFTER trying unsuccessfully to open the larder door one small boy turned to his brother and said:

"It's no use, Jim. Not one of these keys will fit it."

"All right then," said Jim resignedly, "all we can do it wait until mamma comes home, and ask her for something for being good boys."

Answers to Correspondents.

INQUISITIVE—You ask us how to pronounce that new dance, maxixe. Most people of common sense pronounce it foolish.

REFORMER—A good deal of this coarse talk about the way stenographers are treated by their employers is all bosh. We have known a blond stenographer who has worked downtown for fifteen years, and never once has been presumed upon, asked out to lunch or any impertinent suggestion made. P. S.—The stenographer we have reference to is a male.

Quite True.

A QUIETLY dressed woman was arranging to take out a life insurance policy

"Your name, please?" said the agent.

"Lucy Brown."

"Are you married?"

"Occasionally."

"I—I don't think I quite understand," said the astonished clerk.

"I said occasionally," repeated the woman. "My husband is a traveling man."

Heard These in Boston?

His Only Want.

A SALESMAN was recently advised by a brother ambassador of commerce to call on a certain tradesman with whom he had no account. He took the hint, called on the man, and was received most genially.

"May I show you my samples?" inquired the salesman.

The tradesman had no objection, and from an insignificant-looking bag the traveller produced quite a surprising quantity of specimen goods.

"Well," said the affable shopkeeper, when the bag was at last emptied, "there's only one thing I want today."

Out came the order book.

"Thank you, Mr. ——," remarked the salesman, delighted at opening a new account; "and what is that?"

"Why," was the reply, "I want to see how you're going to get all those samples into that little bag again!"

Who Would Laugh Best.

A VERY large lady with a very large hat was sitting in the orchestra directly in front of a mild-mannered gentleman, who, for the greater part of one act, was unable to get a glimpse of the stage. At last, unable to endure his enforced blindness any longer, he bent forward and whispered:

"Excuse me, madam, but would you mind removing your hat?"

"Why should I remove my hat?" retorted the lady

"Because," protested the man, "I can't see the stage, and I want to laugh with the rest of the audience."

"Well," replied the lady, turning away again, "you watch my shoulders, and when I laugh you laugh."

Wasn't Used Then.

A SMALL boy who was sitting next to a very haughty lady in a crowded car kept sniffing in a most annoying manner. At last the lady could bear it no longer, and turned to the lad.

"Boy, have you got a handkerchief?" she demanded.

The small boy looked at her for a few seconds, and then, in a dignified tone, came the answer:

"Yes, I 'ave, but I don't lend it to strangers."

He Took the House.

CITIMAN (to house agent)—I thought you said there was a charming view from the front windows? Why, there are only houses to be seen

House Agent—So there is a charming view, sir. In the house opposite lives the most beautiful widow you ever clapped eyes on, and she's always at the window.

How He Wanted It.

"I BEG pardon," said the reporter, "but are you Mr. Spudde, the potato king?"

"Yes, but I don't like that term," replied the magnate, testily. "Oil kings and cattle kings and the like are so comman. Call me a potatonate.

He Had His Nerve.

MISS NEVERSTOP, seating herself between two much-engrossed elderly gentlemen, exclaims: "A rose between two thorns."

"Nay, madam," retorts one; "say rather a tongue sandwich."

Women's Rights—and Lefts.

BILL—Jake said he was going to break up the suffragette meeting the other night. Were his plans carried out?

Dill—No; Jake was.

Some Bull.

"YES," said Brown, "I have a wonderful dog. Only this morning, when I came down to breakfast, after a sleepless night, and forgot to give him his usual tit-bit, he went out into the garden, pulled up a bunch of flowers and laid them at my feet."

"And what were they?" inquired his friend.

"Forget-me-nots," answered Brown, as he hurriedly left the room.

WHEN YOU SEE——

Your neighbor's hens picking up a bit, it is a sign they are picking up the seeds and bulbs in your garden.

Your maid leaning over your backyard fence these warm days, talking with your neighbor's maid, it is a sign your neighbors will soon know what you had for dinner, what your last family scrap was about and what color paper you have just had put on the walls of your front room, together with other things.

A dishevelled-haired, wild-eyed gink chewing the end of a lead pencil and batting his eyes, it is a sign he is writing a Spring poem regardless of the fact that the editors are now preparing their August numbers.

THE OLD SCOUT.

Thrilling Adventures of Hank Eye on His Trip Into Mexico.

OLD HANK EYE is 107 years of age. He has scouted all over America, and has also scooted over a great part of it when the enemy would spot him.

Naturally he has been down in Mexico, preparing a guide book for the American army should it ever go down there.

In Chihuahua Hank was attacked by a savage Mexican Hairless Dog weighing over 8½ pounds. For a moment his situation seemed hopeless, but with rare presence of mind he uncorked the bottle of hair-grower which he always carried with him to keep his mustache sprouting and poured the contents over the dog.

In an instant the dog was covered with hair so long that it tripped on its coat and fell helpless at Hank's feet.

Another thrilling moment was when Hank, disguised as a Gila Monster, saw his own reflection in a pool from which he was about to drink. The poor fellow fainted and fell into the pool, where he was bitten by an alligator. The alligator died instantly, but the bite brought Hank back to consciousness and he managed to scramble out of the pool.

Hank could live in countries where other men would die, as he had trained himself to live on baked sand, which is very plentiful in the blazing Mexican deserts. Although nourishing, this diet wore out his teeth at a tremendous rate, until he invented a miniature rock crusher, which he could place in his mouth at meal times. In addition to keeping Hank in good condition, this also kept him full of grit, which doubtless accounts for his marvelous success as a scout.

It was nothing for the old boy to grab a panther by the tail, although he always admitted it was an awful job letting go again. Hank is at present on the trail in Central Mexico, and we await his first report.

OUR WEEKLY HEALTH HINT.

MEXICO.

TO THE EDITOR—Would you kindly give me a brief but comprehensive description of Mexico and the Mexican character?

JAMES GEORGE.

[We can only comply with the second part of your request. The Mexican character is briefly and comprehensively described as follows: There ain't none.—Ed.]

A QUESTION OF FOOD.

TO THE EDITOR—I understand the main food of the Mexicans is bananas. Do you think a man full of bananas could lick a man who had just scoffed a porterhouse steak?

BILL BRAWN.

ON RAINY DAYS.

TO THE EDITOR—I have a great plan for dispensing with umbrellas on rainy days. My scheme is to wait for a truck going in my direction. Then I scramble along under the truck on my hands and knees. The plan has worked successfully so far, as the truck always keeps my hat dry, and the expense of new trousers has not been excessive, in view of the wear on them.

AMI THERE.

A NEW KIND OF NOVEL.

TO THE EDITOR—I am writing a novel which should be a success, as it will be impossible to make moving pictures of it. All the exciting events happen either at night or in a coal hole in which a burglar is cornered.

ROBERT WRONNE.

P. S.—As the coal hole is supposed to be in my house, there is no coal in it. I haven't sold enough stories for that.

O SPRING, DELIVER US!

Should the 'Misleading Lady' Mislead and Get Away with It?

Being a Few Lines from the Comedy Which Opens at the Colonial Theatre Tomorrow Night and Which Was Written by Charles W. Goddard, Author of "The Perils of Pauline."

FEMININE sex appeal, exaggerated by the modern wearing apparel affected by ladies of this and most other countries, brings out a situation in the first act of "The Misleading Lady" by Charles W. Goddard, author of "The Perils of Pauline"—a situation in which the man, who has been attracted to the point of proposing marriage, finds it necessary to resort to brute force in order to win his bet. "The Misleading Lady" comes to the Colonial Theatre tomorrow night.

The curtain goes up, disclosing the country home of John Cannell, where a week-end house party is in full swing. Miss Helen Steele, one of the guests, has made a wager with Sidney Parker, another guest, that she can make Jack Craigen, another guest, propose marriage to her within five days

Craigen and Miss Steele have never met before. Parker is a theatrical manager, and is about to produce a new play, "The Siren," in which, if she wins the bet, Miss Steele is to have the principal part. All the other members of the house party, excepting of course, Craigen, know of the scheme. As the curtain goes up there is disclosed Helen Steele and Jack Craigen. There are only five minutes before the time is up. Obviously the girl is trying to make the man propose. Behind the curtains and the doors the dozen other guests are waiting breathlessly.

He does propose, whereupon the lights go up, the other guests rush in and congratulate the girl on having won the wager and the part in the new play. Craigen does not know what it all means, and calls for an explanation, whereupon he is humiliated and chagrined. This feeling turns to disgust when a moment later, Cannell, the host, enters with a stranger whom he introduces to Craigen as Miss Steele's fiance. Craigen picks up his hat and coat and starts for the door to get his car and drive back to New York. Just as he is leaving, the girl sends for him and they have a conversation with no one else present.

Helen—Mr. Craigen!

Jack—Somebody call me? I beg your pardon, Mr. Barrie's Siren.

Helen—Jack, listen to me.

Jack—No, please! Remember the old saying: "Once stung, twice shy."

Helen—But, Jack! I played the game; I can listen to the consequences.

Jack—You can? Sit down. Helen, you played the game stupidly, blindly, like all the women of today.

Helen—How?

Jack—Because you offer only one bait to us men. Of all the cards you hold you know how to play just one. It is an ace; it takes one trick—the first—and then you lose all the others

Helen—And what is that one card?

Jack—Your sex. Man tunnels the mountains, spans the plains that you may travel in luxury; he feeds you, clothes and shelters you and works body and brain to exhaustion that you may have always new comforts and luxuries—

Helen—Doesn't he share them?

Jack—Yes, but he supplies them; he lays them all at your feet, and in return what do you offer? Your sex.

Helen—It was enough in your case.

Jack—Quite true. You won your first trick. We can't take the credit of that away from you, but you can never win another from me. You know it isn't pleasant to be made a fool of. You hurt me deeply, because when I told you that I loved you I meant it, every word. But I'm afraid you'll always remain exactly what you are—a pretty woman, a waster, a consumer of human energy who will contribute in return—nothing.

Helen—Nothing! Perhaps my name will mean something in this world. Perhaps I will achieve things

Jack—You should be very successful on the stage. And why?

Helen—Why? That is for you to explain.

Jack—And I will. You'll win your measure of success as all women win their little triumphs of today—by sex appeal.

Helen—That's not true.

Jack—It is true. It is true at this moment as you stand there a flaming, glaring example of sex appeal. Every garment on your body was designed for that one purpose—sex appeal. Look at that skirt, caught and hung in sensuous folds that first hide, and then reveal and always suggest the limbs beneath. (She sits on sofa). slashed in front that a silk stocking and feminine ankle may be seen; it's femininity exaggerated by the artificial high heel.

Helen—(Hides foot under her skirt. Turns to him)—That is the style.

Jack—And what is style? The latest trick and device by which the female figure may be violently suggested to the eye. And why the neck uncovered so low? Is it for comfort, for convenience? No; because woman has learned by experience that the rounded bosom suggests maternity, fires man's imagination and appeals mightily.

Helen—The women who wear the gowns you dislike do not design them.

Jack—Well, for that matter, the murderer doesn't design his revolver—nor the drunkard distill his own whiskey. It is the motive behind the thing that counts. (Pause.)

Helen—What do you mean?

Jack—I mean that you women affect to despise the physical side of man, and yet you eternally play for it.

Helen—(Rises)—We are forced to play for it. The dress, the styles, the sex appeal—as you call it—is man's own creation, the result of his own demand. Suppose I do use my ankles to attract men; suppose all women use their sex appeal as weapons to influence them.

Jack—They do.

Helen—Well, what if they do? Why shouldn't they?

Jack—Only this, when you fish for suckers look out for sharks

Helen—If this power is wrong and not to be used, why was it given us? Why shouldn't we use it? Why may not woman use the only weapon she has upon man, the one creature in all the animal world weak enough for her to prey upon?

Jack—No reason at all. They are her weapons. And good weapons they are. A beautiful woman certainly goes heavily armed. It's all right, it's fair, it's all in the game, yet how you would cry out if I should use strength and brute force, the weapons God has given me in the little duel of the sexes!

Helen—Well, Mr. Craigen, I won't say you're a brute. You are primitive and simple. You understand a little about women in the mass, but you know nothing of her as an individual. What you ought to do is to catch one and chain her up somewhere or put her under a bell-glass and study her. Then you'd learn something. But the only way you will ever get one, I'm afraid, is your Patagonian method of something the knobs from one side of your club and dragging her off by the hair of her head.

Jack—Do you think I could learn anything more about you if I chained you up under a bell-glass?

Helen—(Speaking from the stairs)—You have lots of things to learn, Mr. Craigen. I felt rather badly because I thought I had hurt you; but I don't take you seriously any more. Good night! (door opens) Oh! Haven't you left your car at the door?

Jack—Do you know, Miss Steele, there are forty gallons of gasoline in that car, and before morning, with a little luck, I hope to have a subject under the bell-glass.

(Jack throws the overcoat he carries on his arm over her head. Helen gives one scream before he stifles her cries. He presses electric switch. Lights out. Carries her out door to car.)

Here you see Ines Buck (Helen Steele) winning a bet by making Lewis S. Stone (Jack Craigen) propose. She wins in full view of her fellow conspirators.

And His Monologue of Fun, Which He Labels "Don't Go on the Stage."

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

EVENING folks. I wonder if you'll like my singing as well as the people in the last town I played did? Now, remember, I don't want to brag, but personally I am simply carried away with my singing. If you'd seen me in that last town I could have proved it to you. The audience got ahold of me and carried me to the city limits.

That town was what they called a watering-place. The only thing I saw there that was watered was the milk. Watering-place! All the people I saw were drunk. Still I've always heard that mineral water makes you feel a little rocky.

The landlord of the hotel spoke to me very kindly when I stepped up and put my autograph in the big book on the desk. Of course, little reckoned he that I was going to stand him off a little later. And peevish landlords do annoy me so. He was the ringleader of the gang that pulled that city limits stuff. Oh, a actor's life is the limit, always!

The bed in that hotel was too short. Maybe I got that impression because I slept in it too long. It was one of those Turkish bath beds. You know, you'd go to sleep and in a minute you'd be dreaming you were lying on a marble slab.

In the morning a petite little chambermaid came to my door and rapped. I said to her, "I see you're wearing a wrapper." And she countered with "Sure, all our rappers wear wrappers." I looked at her hungrily. She said, "What'll you have?" I said, "Watcha got?" She said, "Rheumatism." So I said, "Well, I'll take pie."

They had special rates for the clergy at this hotel. The rates were a dollar extra, because those fellows don't patronize the bar. Going along on that basis, I, of course, paid nothing. Then there are special terms for actors and musicians. Oh, are there. Yes, but they are not being said out loud.

Somebody has just made a low crack about those special terms for actors and musicians. Special terms of court, he says. Huh. Well, he won't get a rise out of me, as the bum bread said to the yeast. They may arrest my attention, but won't arrest me. Now for the rest of it.

I must tell you about one of my queer expenditures at that terrible hotel. There was an old maid there who said she was perfectly wild about traveling men. I've often thought since I left her what makes her wild. I guess because the hotel and the town where it was are so all-fired tame.

Old! Oh, wow; she was so old that she crossed the Red Sea before it was painted. And skinny! Ouch! I cut myself hugging her. But only once. Believe me, if beauty's only skin deep, that woman has been skinned for sure. The day I left town I asked her to lend me some money. She said, "Why? Are you short?" I said, "Yes, only five foot four."

Even as a boy in school I gave promise of becoming a great comedian. One day the teacher asked me why George Washington was the first President. I told her because T. R. wasn't born yet. And the reason I'm a Democrat today is because I had to stay after school then and write Teddy's name a thousand times.

But I always felt kindly toward my old teacher. She would never spank me on a full stomach. She always turned me around the other way.

Now I'm a poor old chicken-pocked married man, and wife says I have to march in the suffragette parade next month and carry a banner. Last year I carried one that said, "If Men Are Allowed to Vote, Why Can't I?"

Wife says just wait till women go to Congress. I'm waiting fluently. I want to go and see that House of Miss-Representatives in session. One of their arguments is that women's minds are cleaner than men's. They ought to be. They change them oftener. Some argument.

Then they try to pull the moss-covered stuff about women being more truthful than men. Here's a tip to some of you fellows to get by that. When a man has a birthday, for instance, he takes a day off. When a woman has a birthday, she takes years off

When I decided to make it a case of marry with this inhuman human crab (I hope she's not standing in the wings), of course, I had to line up for inspection before the old man. I told him I had a good ear for music, inasmuch as father had played the bass drum in the war. Then I told him to come out on the porch and I'd show him how I took hold of things. That they had named a punching bag after me because I was such a bounder. That I also knew all about automobiles, having read the catalogues.

The old boy said he seemed to see something of the Indian about me. I assured him that what gave me that appearance was that I always traveled on a scalper's ticket.

Well, boys, if you ever decide to become actors, remember there are two ways of being stage-struck. Before you become an actor and after. The way some of us get stage-struck after we go on, with cabbages, carrots and similar fire-arms, you might think we were vegetarians. Don't you believe it. We like our meat, too, but we won't beef about it.

RESOLUTE HAS TWO ACCIDENTS ON FIRST TRIAL TRIP

Cup Yacht "Loses" Centreboard—Tackle Breaks and Drops the Huge Mainsail—But Boat Is a Speed Marvel

BRAVES BEATEN BY QUAKERS IN A 6-2 TUSSLE

Warm Weather Fails to Change Stallings' Men's Luck Against Phillies.

By NICK FLATLEY.

The worm still refuses to turn. The fatal spell of misfortune that has the Braves in its clutches was right on the job again yesterday, and they dropped the opening game of the Philadelphia series, 6 to 2.

The saddest feature of the day was the fact that the Stallings outfit never did seem to be in the hunt.

The long bats of the Doom crew made the result of the game almost a foregone conclusion in the very first inning.

In that lurid session, the invaders poled out a pair of home runs—not lucky blows, but real healthy wallops—that made Hub Perdue, who had essayed to do the hurling, look rather weak about the knees.

The brace of round trip bumps, with the addition of a hit immediately before gave the Phillies three runs and had the Braves off another stern chase. And they never caught up, or even threatened to do so.

MARSHALL ALWAYS STRONG

On one or two occasions a slight flurry in the hostile defence, or a brace or so of Brave bangs caused a momentary spasm of hope in the hearts of the 8,000 fans who saw the rout. But invariably on these occasions young Marshall, who had been selected to stop the Boston hitting, did just that, and made rooters mourners.

While the Boston outfit did not do much to cause thrills, the visitors had more than enough ginger on display to suffice for a couple of teams. If the Federal League incursions shot up the Philadelphia infield and ruined the pitching staff, according to advance notices some time back it is by no means apparent just now.

Young Irelan, who is at second while Otto Knabe is managering down in outlaw Baltimore, was the fielding star of the game. He had all kinds of chances and accepted them with the grace and perfection of an Eddie Collins. Paskert at short was no Mike Donlan, but he looked as if he would soon be used to the job and good at it.

Bill James, who has not been earning his salary, except by spasmodic warmings up, since the season started, finally got a chance to show after Perdue had been banished in the fifth. The blonde haired youth looked very good, except in the [illegible]th inning, when a murderous assault put him in the hole for two runs.

Hans Lobert had the honor of leading the day's slugging, getting a homer, two doubles and a single in the four times he approached the [illegible]. For the Braves, Bert Whaling was the only player who showed at all well with the stick, his two hits coming when men were on. He was the sole Brave to get more than a single safety. In fact, the team total for the game was six.

THREE RUNS IN FIRST.

The invaders started business right off the reel, Paskert getting a safety when Deal deflected a smash that Maranville might have fielded. Dode could not get out of the way of Becker's rap between first and second and was out when he stopped it with his ribs. It went as a hit of course.

Lobert caught the first ball Perdue

MRS. EMMONS ON DECK AS SPARS CRASH

First Cup Boat Under Canvas, with Nat Herreshoff at the Helm, Runs Away in All Kinds of Wind.

Impressive Trial of the Bristol Yacht—Races Away from Fleet Power Craft—Accidents Imperil Sailors.

By HARRY C. THOMAS.

BRISTOL, R. I., May 2.—The Herreshoff cup candidate Resolute had a bad start today in its first trial trip. Even at that, the yacht proved to be a wonderful creation. It was the first of the cup defenders to go out under sail.

To start the day wrong—and it was a good, bright day with a fair northerly wind blowing out off Prudence Island and down along the Portsmouth shore—somebody blundered and one of the centreboard chains was broken, letting the board down. It was necessary to send for a diver from Newport. It took several hours to get under way and put the board into position again.

ACCIDENT THREATENS CREW'S LIVES.

Then, just as Nat Herreshoff had got the Resolute into good sailing condition and "Charlie" Adams was bringing the big Yankee cup candidate up under the Portsmouth shore in a long, hard beat for home, an inside tackle block broke aloft and came crashing down on the deck, perilously near some of the crew and skippers, who had to scamper for their lives.

Although Adams luffed the Resolute up into the wind, the big mainsail flapped itself free. One of the battens on the sail ripped out and the batten pole was broken and fell overboard.

All in all, although the Resolute came up to the expectations of those aboard, it was a rather discouraging beginning, although all the damage done won't amount to much. It means one thing, however, and that is that aluminum blocks glisten in the sun and [illegible] pretty, but do not seem just what they ought to be in a pl[illegible].

UNDER SAIL IN MID-AFTERNOON.

The Resolute was warped out of its berth at the Herreshoff yard a little after 3 o'clock, but it was nearly a half-hour later before the big mainsail was drawing well and the head sails ready for action.

On board were Robert W. Emmons, 2d, Charles Francis Adams, 2d, George E. Nichols and John Parkinson, Jr., all of Boston—the men who will direct the racing of the Resolute—George A. Cormack, secretary of the New York Yacht Club, and Nat Herreshoff, the designer.

Captain Christensen looked after the crew, who were in bright, clean uniforms of white. And they worked in their first real test as if they knew their business.

Mrs. Robert W. Emmons, wife of the managing directors of the syndicate that owns the Resolute, was also aboard the yacht throughout the test.

She was on the deck when the big tackle block came crashing down, but was one of the most unconcerned throughout it all. She is not new to the yacht racing game. She has raced smaller types of boats for some seasons around Buzzards Bay, and was anxious today to have her husband get the Resolute through the trials without any mishap. But in this she was disappointed, and came near witnessing an accident that might have cost some of those aboard serious injuries.

ATHLETICS WIN FIRST BATTLE FROM RED SOX

Mackmen, with Plank on the Mound, Beat Carrigan's Men, 5 to 2.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 2.—There was no good reason why the Athletics should have defeated the Red Sox here this afternoon by the score of 5 to 2, because Boston outhit the Macks nine hits to six.

The principal factor in the Champions' victory was that their bingles came at more opportune moments than those of the Boston band.

All of the damage to the hopes of the Red Sox was done in the second inning when the Mackmen tore off four runs, which proved sufficient to win the game.

Boston started off well enough when Engle and Hooper singled in succession and the local fans began to fear that the selection of Eddie Plank for mound duty was a mistake.

But when Speaker drove one out at Collins he was doubled up with Engle at third and Lewis was an easy out to McInnis.

M'INNIS STARTS IT.

The Sox got another hit in the second inning when Scott singled with two out, but Cady fanned a few minutes later. In the Athletic half, Baker was first up and fouled to Cady.

McInnis was the first Mack batter to get to Rankin Johnson who has the distinction of defeating his illustrious namesake, Walter Johnson. He rapped out a single to the right garden and went to second when Strunk hit for a base in the same direction. Strunk was forced at second by Orr, Yerkes making the out unassisted.

After Orr stole the second sack, Schang drew a free pass and the bags were loaded.

Johnson seemed to become excited for he passed Plank and McInnis and was forced across the plate. Then Murphy was hit with a pitched ball and Orr scored. Johnson telegraphed his nervousness to Scott and the Sox shortstop fumbled Daley's grounder, Schang and Plank scoring. Scott, however, threw to Janvrin and got Murphy at third.

The Engle-Hooper combination started something in the third for Boston, but it lacked development. After Johnson had fanned, Engle got another single and Hooper came across with his second safe slam. Plank disposed of Speaker on strikes, but Lewis sent Engle home with a single.

Janvrin's fly to Murphy ended the inning.

LEWIS SENDS IN RUN.

The Athletics scored one run in the fourth on a pass to Strunk, an out, a steal and Eddie Plank's double. Boston's second run came in the eighth session after Engle had been retired on a drive to Baker. Hooper hit one to left field for a single. He advanced on Speaker's single and scored when Lewis hit safely.

After Janvrin's fly to Strunk Speaker and Lewis pulled a double steal, but Yerkes was harmless and was thrown out by Orr. In stopping a drive by Daley in the seventh, Johnson sustained an injury to one of his fingers and Foster took his place on the hill.

The only extra base hit of the game was Eddie Plank's double. Johnson struck out three batsmen and Plank went him two better. Plank had good control and issued no passes, while Johnson walked three Mackmen besides hitting one.

Boston was charged with two errors, both by Scott, and Orr, who is substituting at short for Jack Barry who was spiked yesterday, made [illegible] miss for the champions.

The luck of the game took against the visitors who were temporarily lacking their true form. The Mackmen didn't show anything wonderful and it is evident that they will have to pick up considerably if they expect to land the World's Series money at the end of the present season.

HARVARD BEATS SYRACUSE NINE BY 3-0 SCORE

Frye's Superb Pitching Baffles New York State Batters; Big Crowd at Game.

AYRES STARS IN FIELD

Harvard scored a shut-out victory over Syracuse this afternoon on Soldiers' Field by a score of 3 to 0. Frye pitched one of his best games of the season and held the New York Staters safely at all times during the game.

The biggest crowd of the season turned out to see the game and they were well repaid. The game was fast and some clevr fielding stunts were pulled off. Even the old hidden ball trick was pulled successfully, Ayres of Harvard being the victim.

But four Syracuse players reached first base and only one of the visitors got as far as second, such an effective game did Frye pitch. He did not issue a base on balls and found six of the visitors as victims of his shoots

HARVARD SCORED IN FIRST.

A stiff wind blew acros the diamond throughout the game, but in spite of these adverse conditions only one erro was made and that was a fumbled ground ball by Slater of Syracuse.

Harvard scored one run in the opening inning Nash led off with a sharp singlet hrough shortstop and Wingate sacrificed him along to second. Clark struck out, but Ayres tapped a hard one over second base and Nash crossed the plate.

This one run was the margin of the lead for six innings. Nichols pitched good ball and held the Harvard batters in check till the seventh inning, when he got a bit wild and passed two men, hit another and allowed two hits.

Gannett was first up in this inning and worked the Syracuse twirler for a base on balls. Eddie Mahan was substituted for Gannett and the N[illegible]tick boy immediately stole second base. Hardwick struck out and Milholland was an easy out, A Hearn to Foley and the chances for score looked dubious as Frye was at bat and he is considered a weak hitter.

FRYE GOT SINGLE.

The big pitcher surprised every one, however, and sent the ball sailing to right field for a clean single scoring Mahan. The right fielder juggled the ball for a while and Frye continued to second base. Osborn was hit by a pitched ball and then Nash came up with a one-bagger to centrefield and scored Frye. Wingate walked, filling the bases and Sid Clark's offering was a pop fly to the shortstop

Ayres put up a grand fielding game at third base. Several of his chances were of the hardest variety but he handled the ball cleanly and his throws were accurate

Providence Grays Defeat Montreal

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 2.—The Providence Grays won the opening game of the series from Montreal today by a score of 3 to 2. The inability of the Montreal batsmen to hit Oldham with men on the sacks was the cause of the defeat.

Two fast double plays pulled off by the Grays cut the visitors off of runs. M[illegible] twirled a good game but his wildness in the second inning cost him the game. The score:

pitched and deposited it out on Columbus avenue. Result, two runs. Not to be outdone, Magee also saluted Hub's initial offering in even more savage fashion. His homer landed in the stand out in centre.

If the Gallatin gatling could only have avoided pitching a first ball. he might have got past, for the next two men were easy infield victims.

MARSHALL IN FINE FORM.

For two innings next succeeding, the schoolmaster escaped being scored on, in fact Lobert's lusty double to left was the only safety garnered But the Braves were eating out of Mr Marshall's hand. Evers drew a walk in the opener, but nobody else reached

In the fourth, however, the circuit clout habit caught Luderus, and he banged out a liner that bounded off the screen in deep right centre and bounded into the bleachers. It was some wallop.

After going runless in their half and likewise blanking the Dooins, starting the fifth, the Braves proceeded to chalk up a counter. Schmidt arrived by grace of Luderus' fozle, went to third when Paskert threw wild on Deal's crack and registered on Boston's first hit, a one shot to right contributed by "Moose" Whaling.

Whaling again stepped into fame in the seventh frame, off which Griffith pried the lid with a safety through the box. Schmidt came to time with a sharp slam to right that put Grif on second, from whence he crossed the rubber on the second Whaling rescue wallop, which dented the right field fence.

FOUR HITS FOR LOBERT

The assault on James, who had relieved Perdue in the sixth, opened in the semi-final seance. With one out, Becker poled a double over Griffith's roof, got to third on Lobert's fourth safety, a one-baser to centre, and came across, accompanied by the Dutchman, when Magee laced a double to right. Another hit followed, but no more scores.

The Braves gave the fans who had remained a faint period of hope in the ninth, after the first two men up had died easy deaths. Schmidt poled out a single to right, and when Deal followed suit, it looked as if a final chance had come. Especially, as Bert Whaling, who had bumped in both Boston runs, was up.

But it was asking too much of the big catcher to repeat his life-saving work. He fouled a couple, then let a strike on the outside get by and the day was lost

Senators Smother the Yankees, 14-1

WASHINGTON, May 2.—The Senators handed the Yankees their worst beating of the season today when they drove three pitcher's from the box and took the large end of a 14 to 1 score. Warhop blew up in the fourth, Pieh was clouted for five runs in the only inning he lasted and Cooper allowed two more.

Griffith used two "cubs" and neither were in any danger. Foster, an ex-Yankee, was the most active worker for the Senators, two singles and a homer which scored two ahead being his contributions.

MEDFORD VICTOR OVER MADDEN, 3-1

Winners Climb a Notch in Suburban League Standing.

Medford High climbed a notch higher in the Suburban League race yesterday afternoon, by administering a 3 to 1 defeat to the Malden High School lads, at the Malden field.

Malden outbatted the winning aggregation by a 7 to 4 average, but the Medford hits were timely, and in the opening session were intermingled with two errors, which resulted in two tallies.

Spectators on both sides soevrely criticized Umpire Murray in the fifth inning, when he retired Fowler, the Malden catcher, at the plate, depriving Malden of a score.

In the last half of the eighth inning, Captain Murphy jumped to the plate with two down, and straightened one out close to the lef field fence, and Shum, the Medford left fielder, just missed the ball by inches, and Murphy was credited with a double. Pitcher Flanders followed with a well-placed double into centre field, which brought Captain Murphy in with Malden's only score.

Malden's half of the ninth inning was bri mfull of joys and gloom for the Malden fans. Reid the first man to stick, drove a long hit into the left field, directly in the same place where Captain Murphy had batted in the previous inning, but the fleet-footed Shum was under the ball this time, making a catch that would do credit to tris Speaker When he caught it, he was on a dead run, but held onto the ball. Rounds, the next Malden batter, drove a pretty hit into centre field. Bill Fowler, the Malden catcher, then stepped to the stick and cracked the sphere into deep left field, bringing the spectators on both sides to their feet, as it looked like a sure homer. The next instant sa wSullivan, the Medford centre fielder, spear the ball out of the clouds with his gloved hand, and he made a direct relay throw to first base for a double out and the game.

Medford's score in the fifth came when two were down, and the Malden catcher heaved the ball into left field in his attempt to throw to third base to catch a base runner from second

Hartford Wins Out in Tenth, 8 to 7

WATERBURY, Conn., May 2.—Waterbury tossed away its chances in a heavy hitting game with Hartford here this afternoon and lost in 11 innings, 8 to 7. There was high wind throughout the game which converted into safe long hits many fly balls that would have ordinarily been easy for the outfielders. Four fast double plays, three of them by Hartford, featured, while Smith led in hitting with two singles and a double in four times at bat.

Paddy Green Beaten by Bridgeport, 2-1

NEW BRITON, Ct., May 2—Paddy Green was off color in today's game, losing to Bridgeport, 2 to 1. A couple of passes and singles in immediate succession, by Hallman and McClintock, gave the Bridgeports their first victory of the season. The "Skies" failed to cluster their hits and were wild on the base paths.

New London Gets Scare But Wins

NEW LONDON, Ct., May 2.—Notwithstanding the chilly atmosphere nearly two thousand paid admission to see the Planters play their first game with New Haven this afternoon. Commodore Morton Plant with a large party of friends occupied his private box and was more than pleased when the Elm City nine was defeated in a closely contested game by the score of 2 to 1. The local nine was given a scare in the ninth inning when New Haven had three men on bases with none out, but Ashley, a new pitcher this season, managed to pull out of the hole by excellent control The score

SOMERVILLE HIGH BEATS MELROSE

Red and Blue Nine Bats Out 6 to 1 Victory and Leads League.

Somerville High took the lead in the Suburban League race by defeating Melrose, 6 to 1, in a fast game at Pine Banks Park, Melrose, yesterday afternoon before a crowd of nearly 1,500 people. Melrose made three costly errors and Somerville's bunching of hits counted for the scores.

When it came time to play no umpire had showed up. The team coaches, after conference, decided to put a man from each team in. Fleming from Melrose and Cushing from Somerville then acted as umpires and there was less criticism of their work than of any of the regular umpires this season

For the first four innings neither team scored. In the opening of the fifth inning Hirshon and J. Robertson, the first two men at bat for Somerville, went out on grounders. Hyde then got a safe hit to centre field. Bianchi followed it with a two-bagger, scoring Hyde. Fitzgerald was safe at first on a poor throw by Holt, allowing Bianchi to score. Downing was passed by Pitcher Nowell, St. Angelo made a safe hit, filling the bases, but Ford went out on a fly to Ross in right field.

Melrose's only run came in the sixth inning, Dike getting a two-bagger after Nowell had grounded out. Little struck out and Ross got a two-bagger scoring Dike.

In the eighth inning St. Angelo got a safe hit into left field, Ford followed with a hit to right field, H. Robertson and Hirshson each flied out, but J. Robertson got a hit into right field scoring St. Angelo.

In the ninth inning Bianchi reached first on Little's error, Fitzgerald reached first on Hunter's error and both advanced on a passed ball by Philips. Downing made a hit which should have been an easy out, but through poor judgment resulted in filling the bases. St. Angelo got a hit scoring Bianchi and Fitzgerald Ford struck out. H. Robertson grounded out, but scored Downing Hirshson then ended the inning by grounding out. The score

Failure to hit in the pinches cost Watertown High its game with Newton High on Claflin Field, Newtonville, yesterday afternoon. Newton won the game, 5 to 3. Bath's Cup Candidate Will Take the Water May 11

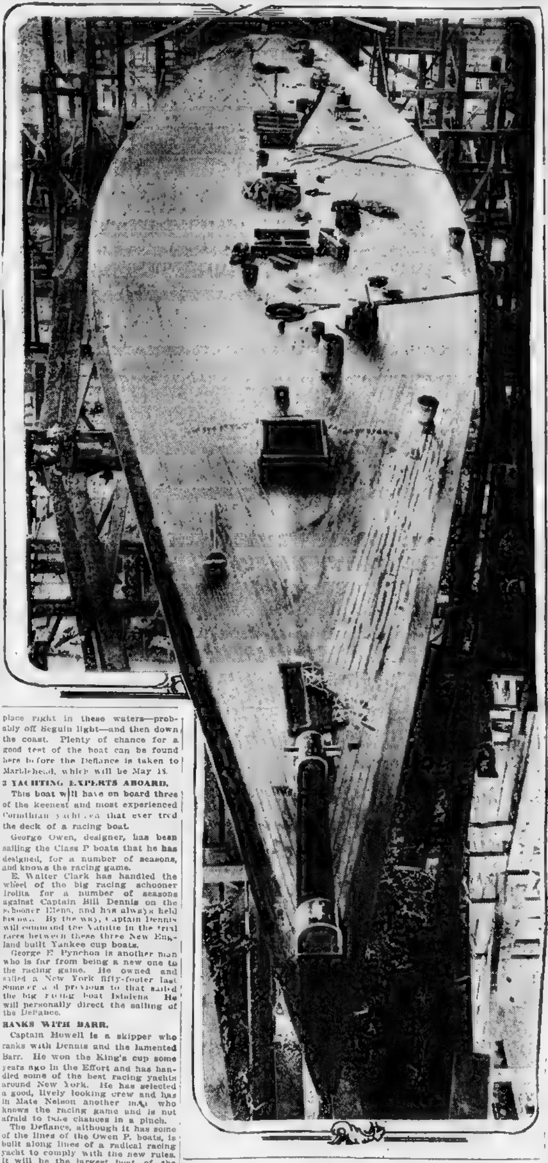
FIRST picture of the Cup Yacht Defiance on the ways at Bath, Me., made exclusively for the Boston Sunday American.



NO SECRECY IN THE CITY BOAT; OPEN TO WORLD

Yacht Will Be Launched in Full Daylight a Week from Tomorrow.

GOVERNOR WILL BE THERE

BATH, Me., May 2.—"This is some boat!" This sums up the opinion of Mate Sam Nelson of the Yankee cup candidate Defiance, building at the Bath Iron works here, and almost ready to be launched Monday afternoon, May 11.

Mate Nelson ought to know. He sailed on the cup defender Reliance and several other fast ones. When he made this remark he had been over the boat Defiance from keel to deck with a critical eye.

Out in the yard of the Bath Iron Company's plant were the two sets of spars being polished and put into shape by the crew of the cup boat. One set is of wood and the other of steel. Both masts will be the tallest ever placed on a racing yacht.

Whichever is used will give the big cup candidate a tremendous sail spread, and with her powerful body and easy lines, the New England-designed and New England-built boat is very apt to upset some of the calculations of the yachting wise men.

DESIGNER OWEN ON THE JOB.

George Owen of Newton, who is designing for the first time in his life a boat that may figure in the international cup races next September, is down here at the works buttoned up in a "Mackinaw coat" of rather loud design and is wearing a cheery smile these days, but then he might as well smile and look pleasant, for he won't talk much when it comes to facts and figures about his boat.

There is no such secrecy, however, about the building of the cup boat, as is found at Bristol and Neponset. Only the usual amount of careful, well-regulated arrangement prevails, whereby anyone who has business in the yard, just has to state it and the man he wants to see is forthcoming if he can be found on the premises. The builders, the designer and the owners of the boat are all very courteous when information is asked and much of it is given for the asking.

DON'T BELIEVE IN SECRECY.

"We don't believe in quite so much secrecy as in the olden days," said Designer Owen, "and we believe that the newspapers and the public are entitled to know something that is going on, even if it is an enterprise backed by private capital. We know that the newspapers have been very fair with us and we are glad to accord the same treatment."

The Defiance is fast nearing completion and is a wonder as to looks. The bright mahogany finish above the waterline will make this boat a picture in the water. The workmanship throughout has been very careful and painstaking.

Many of the oldest ship carpenters in the employ of the big shipbuilding company are at work on the Defiance and these veterans are taking a personal interest in the boat.

They openly say that it is one of the best lined boats that they have ever worked upon and they are even willing to go a little bit farther to make it interesting. They will bet real money on the Defiance to win the trial races with the Resolute and Vanitie.

WILLING TO BET ON IT.

These men may be a little over enthusiastic, but they are perfectly willing to take the chance and that spirit pervades the entire locality down here.

The launching will be a daylight launching. No shades of darkness for the New York-Philadelphia-Boston syndicate that is financing this cup boat. It is to be made a real holiday, too. Governor Haines of this State, with several other prominent State officials as well as city officials of Portland, Bath and other nearby places, will be on hand to watch the launching.

The Resolute was launched at Bristol stern first, but the Defiance will go out of the big torpedo boat shed, where she has been building for months, bow first.

To Miss Frances Clark, daughter of E. Walter Clark of Philadelphia, one of the managing directors of the Tri-city syndicate, falls the honor of smashing a bottle of wine across the bow of the husky racing sloop as it takes the water and christening the boat on which her father will play a prominent part in the racing game.

The crew of the Defiance, twenty-six men, all veteran sailors, are here and are hard at work on the spars and rigging and otherwise about the new boat.

Captain Selah Howell, who will be the professional skipper aboard the Defiance, came down also on the big racing schooner Irolita from Philadelphia, owned by Mr. Clark, which will be the tender. On board with Captain Howell were Mr. Clark and George S. Pynchon, the principal owners in the syndicate. They will remain here probably until after the launching.

If the weather permits—and that is a matter that is giving the owners and crew of the Defiance their only worry just now—the first trial under sail of the big cup boat will take place right in these waters—probably off Seguin light—and then down the coast. Plenty of chance for a good test of the boat can be found here before the Defiance is taken to Marblehead, which will be May 18.

3 YACHTING EXPERTS ABOARD.

This boat will have on board three of the keenest and most experienced Corinthian yachtsmen that ever trod the deck of a racing boat.

George Owen, designer, has been sailing the Class P boats that he has designed, for a number of seasons, and knows the racing game.

E. Walter Clark has handled the wheel of the big racing schooner Irolita for a number of seasons against Captain Bill Dennis on the schooner Elena, and has always held his own. By the way, Captain Dennis will command the Vanitie in the trial races between these three New England built Yankee cup boats.

George F. Pynchon is another man who is far from being a new one to the racing game. He owned and sailed a New York fifty-footer last Summer and previous to that sailed the big racing boat Istalena. He will personally direct the sailing of the Defiance.

RANKS WITH BARR.

Captain Howell is a skipper who ranks with Dennis and the lamented Barr. He won the King's cup some years ago in the Effort and has handled some of the best racing yachts around New York. He has selected a good, lively looking crew and has in Mate Nelson another man who knows the racing game and is not afraid to take chances in a pinch.

The Defiance, although it has some of the lines of the Owen P. boats, is built along lines of a radical racing yacht to comply with the new rules. It will be the largest boat of the three. It will probably have to allow time to each of them, but just how much is not clear at present.

Unlike the Resolute, the Defiance has rather full underbody and the displacement will be higher. It has a centreboard that when down will give the Defiance a draft of considerably over 21 feet, the draft of the Resolute. The Defiance will steer with a wheel on a considerable angle.

MATERIAL IS SHIP TESTED.

The deck will be flush with no rail. It is of spruce and will be canvas covered. The hatches will be low and located well forward. Every bit of material that has thus far gone into the Defiance has already been ship tested, and when the boat goes overboard, the owners will feel well satisfied that from keel to deck, the boat is as well night perfect as skilled workmanship from the Pine Tree State boat builders can make it.

The fact that the Defiance will have tow masts, one of wood and one of steel, means just one thing. The rig of the cup boat is to figure quite a little in the trials and no trouble or expense will be spared to replace one with the other if either one is found to be lacking the proper qualifications.

The Defiance has a steel frame. It is made light and from the present appearance of the boat, she will be able to move fast in light air, although she looks to be a heavy weather craft.

With a long flat overhang considerably longer than either the Resolute or Vanitie, the Defiance tapers down to a long, rakish bow almost to a scissors point. A bowsprit will shop outboard about ten feet, and in comparison with the Resolute's, is a "real one."

The Defiance can race with an extremely large mainsail and one small stay sail much after the rig of a Class P boat, or it can race with a smaller mainsail and two stay sails. The rigging and spars, as well as the sails, are almost ready, and by the time launching day arrives, the Defiance will be about ready to take a spin out of the Kennebec River.

Vernor West, who owns the Class P. boat Sayanora down at Portland, has looked the Defiance over. He expressed himself as confident that Owen had hit about the right combination of boat.

The Defiance has more free board than the Resolute and a greater beam. She is all of 115 feet long over all, but this length has been so figured in the plans of the rig that only about two or three minutes may have to be allowed the Herreshoff boat, Resolute, in the races.

The rigging on the steel mast will be much the same as that on the Resolute.

Postone Evers Day at Friends' Request

"Evers Day" at the South End Grounds, originally planned for May 5, has been postponed. The date of the day, which will probably be early next month, when the Braves are home again, will be announced later.

The change was made owing to the request of a number of Troy people who had planned to come to Boston to honor their townsman when he was being feted. They found it impossible to come Tuesday.

RESOLUTE FAST IN ALL WINDS

First of Cup Yachts Shows a Great Trial Off Bristol.

The resolute was sent over a course not measured, but figured at something over 20 miles. The first mile and one-half, she did in five minutes, a speed of a little better than 12 miles an hour, and the boat wasn't pushed at any time. In fact she was carefully nursed in some rough spots, but the day was ideal. It was a strong steady north-northwest wind that held true throughout the afternoon, even freshening a little during the latter part of the afternoon.

CAME IN UNDER OWN SAIL.

The course gave a run and a long broad reach and then a hard beat home. Of course the beat end of the course was marred by the accident, but Adams and Emmons kept the boat on the job. The mainsail flapped around the two small head sails steadied her some and the Resolute came into the mooring without a tow after several short hitches.

On the wind the Resolute today was a marvel of speed. Several pretty power craft were trying to follow the boat, but had hard work doing it, and they were making a speed of better than 13 miles an hour.

Nat Herreshoff took the wheel at the very start and gave the order to cast off the mooring buoy. He had on a long black storm overcoat, which flapped out from behind in the breeze and a big soft black hat that he had to jam down on his head a little more than usual to keep it from blowing overboard.

He gave the large crowd on shore and those on the power craft near by quite a little scare and had about a dozen photographers lined up on the deck of a power boat ready to "get" what looked like a crash between the Resolute and the tender Cape Cod that was moored out beyond the Herreshoff piers.

SOME CLEVER SEAMANSHIP.

But Captain 'Nat' knew just what he was doing. He didn't crash into anything, but brought the boat up into the wind and off on another tack just when he was right under the Cape Cod. It was a pretty piece of work for a man that makes his business building boats rather than sailing them.

Emmons and Adams both had a hand at the sailing, while George Lisbey and Nat Herreshoff looked over the rigging and sails. Adams paid a good deal more of attention to the head sails today than he did to anything else and this is one of his strong points in the racing game. He watched the small sails as they pulled up into place, and kept his eye on them for most of the day.

The Resolute was started today with the wooden spars and the short rig, big mainsail and two small head-sails.

She acted not unlike the Avenger under sail—the boat that "Bob" Emmons made his reputation in some years ago—and yet she had good deal of the Vigilant's lines and actions under sail.

GOOD HEAVY WEATHER BOAT.

Whatever kind of type of boat the wise men care to call the Resolute, she demonstrated one thing to them today, and that was, she is not only a light weather boat, but a pretty powerful heavy weather boat, and no knowing what this Yankee cup candidate might have done if she had been pushed to it.

She rolled up a nice smother under her bow, that rolled away without much wash and every inch of the short overhang came into play, while the Resolute was going for speed.

Only once or twice during the whole afternoon did Adams, Emmons or Herreshoff put her rail under or the spot where the rail usually is on a boat, but not on the Resolute. When the side rail go down, she jumped right along at a very speedy clip and made as pretty a picture as one would care to see.

The Resolute is very quick on the wheel and is far from being a tender boat. She won't have to be nursed much if today's test is any kind of a trial test. It will be a long time too, before any such good sea and breeze will be found down along the Sound as was found in Narragansett Bay today.

EVERYBODY SPIC AND SPAN.

Everybody aboard was spic and span when they went on the Resolute and were in the same condition when they came ashore, which showed that they hadn't had such a very hard time.

Adams was on deck with a brand new white soft hat, and that will stay with him until the end of the racing season. Adams without a white hat in yacht racing would be like a baseball team without a pitcher.

The course today laid down toward Papaquash Point then over to Sandy Point light, then down across to the Portsmouth shore, and up to the mooring off at the Herreshoff works.

The tender Cape Cod did not go out today. The trials will probably go on during the coming week as the repairs won't take long. The new Tod schooner Katoura another racing boat built at Bristol this year, will test her sailing qualities against the Resolute some time next week.

Poncher Lowers Yale Mile Run Record

YALE FIELD, New Haven, Ct., May 2.—R. W. Poncher lowered the Yale mile run record at the Spring meet this afternoon, leading a field of twelve distance stars all the way and finishing the race in 4 min. 25 2-5 sec. The former record, held by N. S. Norris, 1913, was 4 min. 26 1-5 sec. Poncher's time, by quarters, was 61 sec., 2 min. 9 sec. and 3 min. 21 sec.

Heaton Treadway of Stockbridge sprang an upset in the furlong flat race by leading the veteran Tommy Cornell by five yards and winning the event in 21 4-5 sec. Cornell failed to qualify in the 100-yard dash, which was won by a dark horse, L. O. Ricketts, in 10 sec. The times and distances were the best made in a Yale meet in years.

BROWN WINNER IN TRACK MEET

Amherst Athletes Beaten by Six Points in Thrilling Dual Meet at Providence.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 2.—Brown defeated Amherst in a dual track meet here today by a margin of 6 points. The final score was 66 to 60. In the discus throw, next to the last event of the day, Brown secured first and second place which clinched the meet, regardless of the outcome of the pole vault, the last event.

Everett High Noses Out Weymouth, 3-2

Everett High defeated Weymouth 3 to 2 in a fast and closely contested match played on the Everett High School diamond yesterday afternoon. In the third round both teams did all their scoring; fast fielding and excellent pitching on the part of Kelliher for the visitors and Harwood for the Everett nine keeping down the score. Marks, who started for Everett, weakened in the third and was relieved by Harwood, the husky gridiron hero who on his initial appearance as a pitcher never allowed Weymouth a hit in the 6 innings that he worked. Driscoll played a star fielding game at third for Everett and Captain Frahar was the life of his team which fought hard till their last man was retired to down the Suburban leaguers.

Harvard Sure to Win Phraseology Title on Diamond

Johnny Waterman, the catcher of the Harvard baseball team, is the big chief in a pure English movement that has affected all the Crimson ballplayers. There are no more vulgar diamond phrases to come from Harvard tongues on the turf of Soldiers Field, for hereafter only that which is strictly in accordance with Noah Webster's gilt-edge precepts will be uttered.

Patrons of the national game who are used to hearing "That-a boy," "I got it," and "one down" and "two gone" had better prepare themselves for a shock when they pass the Soldiers Field turnstiles this season. Catcher Waterman and his fellow players are casting the old-time phrases into oblivion and the real stuff in English is being served for encouragement and information on the Harvard diamond.

Waterman doesn't say "That's putting 'em over, kid," and "Now you've got them in a hole, old man" to Messrs. Mahan, Hitchcock and Frye when they are doing some major league twirling. Instead, with his first-class Fall River accent he says quietly, but with determination, "That is excellent pitching." And when one man is down Mr. Waterman says "One man is out." And "Two men are out" takes the place of "two gone, kid."

That is not the limit of Waterman's crusade, however. In the game at Cambridge this week the literary backstop of the Crimson team nearly sent Dan Barry, the umpire, to the hospital when he said "Yes, sir" and "No, sir" to him. The umpire expects Waterman to be tipping his cap to him by the end of the season.

The other players on the team, realising that Waterman has the right idea, are imitating his semi-classic speech, and Harvard is sure to win the intercollegiate phraseology title this season if it doesnt take the baseball pennant.

PENN WINNER OF STRAW HAT GAME

Princeton Loses, 2 to 1, While 6,000 Summer Lids Are Displayed.

PHILADELPHIA, May 2.—Pennsylvania defeated Princeton on Franklin Field this afternoon in the annual "straw hat" base ball game, thus taking the 1914 series from the Tigers by two games to nothing. The final score was 2 to 1 and it just about indicates the difference between the two teams.

It was a pitchers' battle all the way through and Penn won not only because they hit better, but because they played more intelligent baseball than the invaders from the Jungletown.

Fully 10,000 persons, with 6,000 straw hats, watched the struggle, to say nothing of some few thousand fair rooters who impartially sported the colors of both sides.

The matter was broached when the two universities met for their conference to frame their annual regatta agreement.

DORCHESTERS TIE BOSTON C. H.

Teams Battle 12 Innings to 7 to 7 Tie; Fast Fielding Features Game.

After playing twelve fast innings of baseball to a 7-to-7 tie at the Dunbar avenue grounds, Dorchester, yesterday afternoon, Dorchester High and Boston College High called the battle off until a later date when they will meet again for supremacy.

The game was the fastest thing ever seen in baseball on the local diamond, and the spectators were greatly surprised at the showing made by the home team as it was conceded by all that the Boston team had a cinch. The battle was marked with heavy hitting and fast fielding by both teams.

Dorchester had the game won up to the last inning, when the boys from the college scored two runs, tieing the game amid the din of much enthusiasm. Faulkner, the clever second sacker for Dorchester, practically saved his team from defeat in this inning by a pretty double play unassisted. He also did some clever work in his position, staring in another hard double play earlier in the game.

CROWD ATTACKS WINTHROP TEAM

Spectators Rush Ball Players When They Defeat Dedham High, 8 to 5.

The ball game played between Winthrop High and the Dedham High team yesterday afternoon at Stone Park, Dedham, wound up in a fight between the players of the visiting team and a number of spectators who did not take to the decision of the umpire in the last inning. The Winthrop boys, after winning a hard-earned game, by a score of 8 to 5, were forced to put up with insults and abuse from some of the spectators who crowded around. There was an exchange of blows and several of the players were injured.

The game was 8 to 5, in favor of Winthrop, at the end of the ninth inning, with Dedham team at the bat. The last man at bat for Dedham struck out. The catcher dropped the ball and picked it up and threw it to first base, and the umpire called the runner out.

The Winthrop players started to leave the field, and as they did so, a crowd of spectators crowded around them. The Winthrop team were forced to put up with abuse and were obliged to defend themselves with their fists.

The visiting team were escorted to the dressing rooms on the grounds under the guidance of several Dedham players, and the Dedham coach and the police were called. The officers escorted the players to their train.

Milton High Wins from Academy, 4 to 3

Milton High School and Milton Academy engaged in their annual game yesterday for the championship of the town and the High School boys came out on top by a score of 4 to 3. The game was well played from the start and abounded in sensational plays. "Dutch" Reiser of the High School was in good form and had the opposing batters guessing, all three of the Academy's runs being the results of errors. He allowed six scattered hits and fanned seven and was invincible with men on bases.

Trainer pitched well for the Academy but was a trifle unsteady, which, coupled with timely hitting, proved his undoing. He was relieved by Felton in the ninth, off whom the winning run was made. The score:

New World Record for the Walkers

TRICKS OFTEN HELP CHAMPS WIN IN RING

By TAD

When Cleopatra had a slave hook a smoked salmon on to Mark Antony's line, which hung over the edge of the barge, she tricked a great kidder who was making a rep as a fisherman.

We have seen and heard of champs in the ring who have been tricked the same way and shown up.

There are tricks in all trades—no lie—and the ring is simply full of tricks and tricksters.

Probably one of the cleverest stunts ever pulled off in the ring was the one Joe Choynski worked on Sharkey in 'Frisco, and only the Tar's wonderful stamina saved him.

It was at the time when Tom was a new man. He had beaten a few of the regulars, and then the big birds jumped in to try and knock him out. Alec Greggains tried it first and failed, and then Choynski agreed to stop Sharkey in eight rounds.

BUMPED HIM AGAINST POST.

Joe fought like a wildcat for three rounds, used everything he had, and belted Tom from post to post and didn't even bother him.

The posts of the ring at this time were thinly padded, and Choynski figured that if he could feint Tom over near a post, then clip him on the chin, he might be able to stop him before the eight rounds were up.

He worked it in a slick manner. He danced along until Tom was near a post, then BANG! walloped him on the chin, and Tom's head got another bang from the post. The Tar was groggy and tired, but managed to come back and give Joe a terrific fight until the bell ended the eighth round.

Spider Kelly tricked Gans into allowing him to stay twenty-five rounds, when Joe should have turned the trick in six or so. He told Joe that if his friends hadn't bet that Gans would stay the limit he'd tear in and knock Joe cold.

GANS LOST HIS NANNY

Gans didn't really know whether it was on the square or not, and thought more of the talk than he did of the fight. Consequently Kelly eased along until the end without being harmed a bit. The next time they met Joe plugged his ears with cotton and cleaned Kelly in no time at all.

Bob Fitzsimmons broke his hand in the fifth round of his fight with George Gardner when he knocked George down. After that his right mitt was useless, but as the gong started each round he rushed at George and swung a foot over his head. Gardner, thinking the hand still good, ducked and clinched, while Fitz, with a big lead, eased along until the twentieth round, and copped the decision.

CORBETT WORKS BLUFF.

When Jim Corbett fought Jim Jeffries at Coney Island, Jeff was a young, strong and dangerous lad, while Corbett was a bit on the toboggan. He wanted to stay the twenty-five rounds and outpoint Jeff, and the only way he could do it was to keep away from mixups. At the start of each round he'd tear into Jeff, fight like a wildcat for half a minute and then stand away and feint.

Just as Jeff would get ready to lunge forward, Corbett would set, make a face, and Jeff, thinking he was going to start another rally, would swing both hands with all his might and duck his head low. Corbett worked this gag round after round, outpointing the big fellow until a lucky punch won for Jeff in the twenty-third round.

CROSS COPIES MURPHY.

Australian Billy Murphy had the "derby" trick of the ring. His old gag was to get into a mixup and come out of it reeling all over the ring, as though he were through. Then, when the other fellow would rush in, Billy would nail him with that deadly right, and it would be all over but counting the dough.

Stanley Ketchel's introduction to the boxing game was when he was hired by a bruiser in Montana as assistant. The boss was a well-known fighter, who had a job on the stage and agreed to stop all comers in four rounds. Ketchel's job was to stand behind the scenes with a club, and his boss would back his opponent to the curtain, Ketchel would bang him on the knob with the club, and they'd bring the next one on.

Oh, it's a sweet life, boys!

Crimson Team Bests Princeton, 2-0, at Soldiers Field and Lands Trophy.

The Milne Cup, emblematic of the Intercollegiate soccer championship will rest in the trophy room at Harvard for another year, for the Crimson eleven defeated Princeton yesterday afternoon on Soldiers Field by the score of 2 to 0.

The Tigers fought back bravely, but were not fast enough to prevent the Crimson from getting the narrow margin that gave them the title and at the same time automatically removed Pennsylvania from top notch honors.

The Quakers led the league up to yesterday's battle and had the Cantabrigian youngsters won by one point they would have lost the league title.

Both scores were made late in the first round. The initial one came when Stevenson bowled over Guy Carnochan, the ball bounding off the latter's shin right in front of the Tiger's cage. Baker took it on the fly and shot it by Jackson for a count.

Five minutes before half time, Weld poled a long one to Francke, who pegged it through the entire Princeton inner defence for another score.

Harvard's record for the season is five games won and one lost. Pennsylvania won four and tied in two games. The Crimson rolled up a score of 16 goals and was scored upon 4 times. The Quakers rolled up the same total in goals, but had two more counted against them.

FACTS, NOT FANCIES

Customs alter, creeds change, but courage and strength have always been and always will be admired

When arguing with the umpire it is well to remember that he who cannot bite had better not show his teeth

The administration at Washington is suspected of having introduced the Federal League to carry out its idea of fostering free competition.

Strange, but true, that the good cards always seem to have a way of falling to the clever player.

* * * * * *

GENERAL LEONARD WOOD—A TRUE TYPE.

Doctor Leonard Wood, now ranking officer of our field forces, was twenty years ago one of the best football players on the Pacific coast. He was a member of that famous Olympic Club team that numbered among its players Felton Taylor, Joe Tobin, Rotanzi and other of equal note. Many were the hard games this team gave the varsity organizations of Stanford and Berkeley in the good old days when these two were playing American football.

Then Doctor Wood, who, by the way, is a New Englander, and an M. D. of Harvard University, began to take on higher and higher honors; commanded the Rough Riders, became military governor of Cuba, commander in the Philippines, ambassador to Argentina and finally chief of staff, U. S. A.; and those of us who knew "Doc" Wood in the old days have always been proud of him, and we knew he would go far

An ardent sportsman, an ideal opponent, a man who always played fair, never bluffed, but who knew not what fear meant in any form, mental, moral or physical, he represented wherever he went, the real spirit of the true athlete.

And wherever Wood went he introduced football and into it a spirit of manly, fair play. No wonder his commands loved him and were ready to follow anywhere.

COMPLICATIONS OF THE PRESENT COACHING SYSTEM.

We progress further along the line of adding to the salary list of coaches in our college athletic organizations. Already two of the most prominent football universities have put on the list a regular salaried head coach for freshman teams, and the chances are others will follow soon.

And this once again brings strongly to our notice the fact that we are likely to enter into an era of bidding for coaches and trainers which will lead to complications in athletics little appreciated by those who only look at the matter superficially.

The result of the University of Pennsylvania considering Connors of Exeter for a trainer has been a case in point, and there was another case in the Winter. Connors stayed at Exeter, but it is said he received a good advance for doing so.

Now, I do not say that a college or university should have the right to consider only coaches or trainers who are not at present engaged, for that would be out of the question, but the point is where to draw the line and where bidding of this character will finally land the various athletic associations.

Every one, even the desirable men whose ability is recognized and appreciated, realize two things; first, that there is a limit, and, secondly, that if the market for such services is going up still further, long-time contracts are a disadvantage rather than an advantage.

Furthermore, let us suppose, for the sake of an example, that we assume that a few men, by their ability to produce winners, become recognized as assets of such value that they could actually determine the question of victory or defeat.

Then we would have the situation confronting us of the longest pocketbook securing the prize instructor and with it the determination of victory

No one would wish to see that result come about, and probably long before we reach that point the situation would lead back to the simpler olden time, when athletics were more a hit-or-miss game and coaches and trainers were few, and, in the case of the former, unpaid.

In other words, it would probably eventuate in a disarmament proposition, and that would mean not only less skill, but very likely, in some instances, increased danger to the participants through the lack of the expert knowledge. Can the progress be stopped short of that unfortunate goal?

STANDARD BOXING WEIGHTS.

It looks as if there was a fair possibility of getting one of the old questions that has always been arising in the boxing world settled at last in a satisfactory manner. That question is the one regarding weights, and the universal standard the world over would do much to simplify matters. It is easy to see how near together England and America are when you compare the following.

Paperweight (known in England as the fly weight)—New York State, American, 108 pounds; English, 112 pounds.
Bantamweight—American, 115 pounds; English, 118 pounds.
Featherweight—American, 125 pounds; English, 126 pounds.
Lightweight—American, 135 pounds; English, 135 pounds.
Welterweight—American, 145 pounds; English, 147 pounds.
Middleweight—American, 158 pounds; English, 160 pounds.

Charles Harvey, secretary of the New York State Athletic Commission, is in correspondence with A. F. Bettinson of the National Sporting Club of London on this matter.

SUMMER BASEBALL QUESTION.

The Summer baseball question is practically settled for this year, because, in spite of a certain amount of uprising against the present rules, those who make the laws still stood put on the proposition that a man could not be paid to play baseball and still be an amateur

And these bodies are perfectly correct in this stand. If we are to depart from it, it will require a change of nomenclature

The governing bodies, while they cannot make an amateur of a professional can, at any time, make a ruling that shall render eligible a man who has professionalized himself in any way.

The question is what such eligibility rules would lead to. Any college or organization has a right to play any man it pleases, but it may not be able to get others to play with them. The highest tribunal is the International A. A. A., and their rules are as follows:

1—An amateur is anyone who competes only for the love of the sport.

2—Competing for money or other pecuniary reward in any sport makes the competitor professional in all sports.

These were the rules that were adopted in Berlin in August, and, unless altered this June, will govern all athletes competing in the Olympic games in 1916

EXETER WINS IN BIG TRACK MEET

Academy Boys Beat Harvard Freshmen by 65 2-3 to 41 1-3; Wilson Is Star.

EXETER, N. H., May 2.—W. Wilcox, Jr., the speedy little Harvard freshman runner, ran the best quarter mile that has been run so far this year on the cinders in the Exeter-Harvard freshman meet this afternoon at Exeter. He was caught by three official timers in 48 4-5s. for the distance. The meet was won by Exeter by a score of 65 2-3 points to 41 1-3 points.

GOLF

General activity has marked the opening of the season at Belmont Springs. J. W. Small and Rose C. Heffernan are particularly hard work [illegible] and have already started the wheels going [illegible] the open championship of the State at [illegible] on May 27 and 28.

One of the saddest tragedies of the 1913 season [illegible] in the way of a 4 [illegible] of Worcester. His name [illegible] every golfer when he made such a [illegible] showing abroad last year but he was [illegible] when J. G. Anderson went [illegible] to the finals at Garden City, followed by Francis Ouimet's great win at Clyde Park.

Personally I think Schmidt is deserving of a better fate, for had Anderson's golf at Garden City not been good enough to take him through to a finalist's position, and had Ouimet not won the open championship, Schmidt would have stood out as the bright star in Massachusetts golf for 1913. As it was, a bad [illegible] followed by the triumphs of other Massachusetts players obscured Schmidt's performance, the best showing any Massachusetts player ever made anywhere up to that date.

If the schoolboys are to have a golf tourney this year they should be able to play their event at some full length 18-hole course. Albemarle in Newtonville has been suggested as a possibility, but, while the club should be thanked for the courtesy, in fairness to the players some other links should be chosen. The Fessenden School is situated on the course, and the boys in this private institution would have the advantage of unlimited practice for weeks before the tourney while the course is not available for other interscholastic players.

It is to be regretted that the day for starting the Wollaston Golf Club Spring tourney was so unfavorable, as it kept the size of the field down and did not improve the appearance of the course. Wollaston greens have been a noted asset in the past, but this year they are far below their usual high standard.

Two more golfers have recently become benedicts. They are William C. Chick of Brae-Burn and E. H. Baker of Belmont Springs. The former was one of the best golfers who ever played on the Harvard golf team and it has been a surprise to many that some great golfing honor has not come his way. Baker married Miss Edith Nesbitt, one of the Philadelphia women's golf team which may mean that she will play for Massachusetts instead of the Quaker City aggregation in the Griscom Cup matches this year.

F. H. Hoyt's win at Wollaston in the qualification round of their Spring tourney Wednesday was a great piece of golfing. The wind was cold, there was a little rain and the course was heavy. A 78 under these conditions was a splendid performance. [illegible] in Massachusetts [illegible] year instead of every alternate [illegible] he will get the rating that he deserves ahead of some [illegible]

John F. M[illegible] is batting for .3[illegible] this season in the [illegible] His win of low net honors in the initial tourney of the season at Wollaston was the cause of congratulations from many of his friends.

All of the "Sad News" lines printed about the 36-hole tourney that Ouimet played in the past week are ridiculous. [illegible] to make Ouimet [illegible] by the climate [illegible] Ouimet is [illegible] fortunate he is not [illegible] newspaper [illegible] citizen when he gets ready to return here.

Congratulations to T. [illegible] Ashley, Woodland. He [illegible] in the first flight at Lakewood in a very classy field. Tom [illegible] victory to reach the matches with Chas. Eaton. I understand the former went to Lakewood as the guest of Mr. Eaton as the result of their practice matches.

Frankon Park is getting its share for the large army of golfers. Some splendid shade trees have been planted just off the links to comfort those who lose all their golf balls in one round.

Brown Leads Field at Meadow Brook

WAKEFIELD, May 2.—Rodney W. Brown was the winner of the best gross prize today at the 18-hole match of the Meadow Brook Golf Club, negotiating the course in seventy-five. The best net went to C. A. Loring, with a thirteen handicap, returned a card of seventy. The scores

SULLIVAN TAKES WOLLASTON CUP

Former Schoolboy Champion Beats Hoyt and Lawrence in Final Day's Play.

Three very unusual golf matches marked the deciding rounds played yesterday in the Wollaston Golf Club Spring tourney. J. H. Sullivan, Jr., a former interscholastic champion from Commonwealth, won the chief trophy, defeating F. H. Hoyt of Woodland, the favorite, for first honors in a poorly played semi-final match and then disposing of V. S. Lawrence, Woodland, in the afternoon at the first extra hole in a contest where the winner was never down from the start.

The final round was followed by a small gallery and they were treated to a match where each player practiced putting, on slippery greens, taking two, three, and four putts, to try and dribble their ball into the cup on greens that were like glass.

Both players scored 8[illegible] which is in itself ample assurance that the finalists were not playing brilliant golf

Lawrence made a wonderful shot at the home hole when he was dormie one down in holing a 35-yard approach shot with a mashie for a 3, when Sullivan had played and was within holing distance for a 3.

This brought him a great hand from the gallery who appreciated the hard up-hill fight the Woodland player had made to keep the match going along on an even footing. Sullivan led most of the time, being 2 up at the 4th, and holding a lead to one up the majority of the holes of the way around. Sullivan holed a beautiful 15-foot putt for a 2 at the third, and a 25-foot putt for a 3 at the 415-yard 14th, and pulled out of a bad hole at the 16th, where he was bunkered and still managed to get a half in 4

Lawrence required 3 shots to get down at the 16th from just off the green and took three putts at the 17th, losing the latter hole after he had held the match square for a couple of holes, and appeared at both the 16th and 17th to have the advantage.

In defence of the players and of the scores, it must be said that the greens were unfair and altogether too fast to make putting at the hole possible, the slightest touch would in some instances make it a question of whether the ball would be on the green or not when it got through rolling.

At the home hole in the morning, where Lawrence gained his win over Standish, the latter drove a perfect ball that just reached the green rolling slowly, yet it ran across into a hard position on the ninth tee. Lawrence was short on his drive and his second shot, which appeared to be very weak, ran by the hole twenty feet, when it seemed to be stopping from the time it had left his club.

Lawrence took three putts on the first green from ten feet, Sullivan lost the sixth for this same reason, and numerous other situations where one or the other had the advantage found them over-running the hole so far that they could not get in on the next stroke. The greens were Winter killed in spots, and while still soft, the surface was extremely fast.

Sullivan's win came at the extra hole, where Lawrence topped his drive and did not recover well enough to hope to halve the hole in a 4, which Sullivan had played perfectly.

The cards of the final match follow:

Sullivan, out .... 5 5 2 4 5 5 6 4 6—45
Lawrence, out .... 7 5 4 5 5 5 5 5 6—47
Sullivan, in .... 5 7 5 4 3 5 4 4 4—41—86

There is little to say of the semi-final matches as Standish and Lawrence were at least 90 getting around, while Hoyt was so badly off his game that Sullivan did not have to do better than 83 to win by a 5-4 margin.

ANGUS' CARD BEST AT BRAE-BURN

Makes Gross Score of 87 in Club Tourney; Knowles Takes Net Honors.

Brae-Burn had the largest field of golfers competing yesterday in a members' tourney, and five flights qualified for the President's cups which remain to be played off during the month of May

G. R. Angus had the best gross card of 87, and low net honors went to R. T. Knowles with 97-24-73.

The players qualified in flights of 8 and will continue at handicap match play until the winner is decided in each group.

There were 57 competitors and 46 returned cards. The fact that Angus was the only player under 90, shows how difficult this course is with the present arrangement of holes and the early season conditions.

Woodland held a freak tourney in the way of a Flag or Cemetery contest, each player being given a flag to place where he made the shot that totaled the same as the par of the links plus the individual's handicap. R. M. Purves was within a few feet of the flag on the home green in first place, and C. P. Whorf, while bunkered, was but a few feet farther away than the winner as the second best competitor

At the other clubs the usual week end contests of medal, par and bogey competitions brought the local golfing contingent out in goodly numbers.

Giants Have Been Having Some Inferior Pitching—But Mathewson, for One, Will Soon Be Right Again

Yankees Are the Great Sensation of the American League—The White Sox Are Still Benefiting by Good Pitching

Written for the Boston American

By TY COBB.

It certainly has amused me to listen to some of the comments of the "fans" on the poor showing of the Athletics and Giants during April. A lot of people have chortled with glee over the reverses sustained by these clubs, and especially in the first few days of the season, and you would think that both are destined to finish in the cellar instead of fighting for the flags.

In the American League, if the "fans" were a little more analytical, they would find much cause for joy in the defeats of the Macks. It is true that the world's champions haven't looked any too good to date, so far as the scores are concerned, but have any of the fellows who hope to see the Athletics beaten out in the race noticed that they have been getting a lot of first-class pitching?

Everybody has conceded that the Philadelphia club can hit and that it has a wonderful fielding defence. Add to this effective hurling and you have almost an unbeatable combination, haven't you?

ATHLETICS WILL SOON BEGIN TO BAT.

The real reason for most of the Athletics' defeats to date has been lack of batting, but that is only a temporary condition and not a real defect. Sooner or later the whole bunch will begin to club the ball, and when it does, look out.

As a member of a club which is going to fight the Mackmen this season, it would please me more to see the Philadelphias winning games by scores of 10 to 9 and 8 to 7 than to be losing them on shut-outs in which the other side only gets one or two tallies. So I warn the fans that it is too early to begin rejoicing over the probability that there may be a new world's champion next Fall

New York, in the National League, appears to owe its early misfortunes to the poor work of the pitchers. Even Mathewson was badly beaten the first time out, and, of course, some of the croakers began to shake heads and say: "Poor old Matty. He's all done this time."

Just wait and see whether the Old Master is through. I don't believe it, for he is such a wise head and so game that he could almost pitch with his left hand and win games. The Giants, just like the Athletics, are sure to strike their stride before long, and anyone who thinks that they are gone is crazy.

"Fans" Fickle About the Athletics.

Fans who were whooping their heads off for the Athletics last Fall and calling them the greatest baseball machine in all history have gone around this Spring saying they are a much over-rated bunch and won the world's championship three times on their luck alone

Can you beat that for fickleness? I suppose that some of the New York fans are panning the Giants in the same fashion. But let these clubs win three or four in a row and the faint-hearts will be out at the ball park shouting their lungs out.

From my personal experience, I know just how this is. If I happen to go a couple of games without a hit, I hear them saying that my batting average is a combination of luck and the charity of the scorers. I almost feel ashamed to take my salary after listening to some of the comments made when I am in a slump.

But as soon as I am able to get a few of them safe again, the same fellows who were in favor of buying me a ticket to Providence or Kalamazoo hail me as the greatest in the world. Maybe that is one reason why a ball player loses faith in human nature.

Yankees Are American League Sensations.

The one big sensation of the American League this season thus far has been the great showing of the Yankees.

Now, don't get me wrong and think that I am picking Chance's club to win the pennant. It will be some time before the "Peerless Leader" can teach his youngsters enough baseball to go out and grab the bunting, though if the club keeps on improving it will be "up there" some day. But Chance has been game enough to get rid of all the old timber and has taken a fresh start with a bunch of "comers."

It requires nerve to start an American League championship season without a single veteran in the outfield, but the New York leader apparently is getting away with it. The best thing about the Yankees is that they are in there fighting for every point. Instead of going through the motions of a ball game, as in the old days, they are trying all the time, which counts for a lot.

Naturally, I feel very well pleased with the showing my own club has made. The Tigers have displayed the old-time fighting spirit and have won a lot of games by coming from behind after the enemy had taken a big lead. That is the way we won three pennants, and if we can keep it up we'll be a factor in this race

In the days of 1907-08-09, we were most dangerous when trailing in the score and were never beaten until the last man was out.

White Sox Have Some Great Pitching.

Chicago keeps on winning by virtue of its fine pitching. The Sox certainly are getting some grand hurling and no matter if they do not class up with some of the other clubs in batting strength or in fielding, they will be dangerous so long as nobody can get more than a run or two against them

There is more strength in Callahan's attack now than Fielder Jones had in 1906, when he won the pennant with a club average of just .228. And it looks as though the pitching is fully as good now as it was eight years ago.

Of course, there is more in the league to beat now than there was then. Philadelphia, Washington and Detroit all look better than any club in the 1906 race, so "Cal" will have to keep hustling all the time to stay in the field.

Poor Cleveland! I never have seen a club in any harder luck than the Naps, and I would almost be afraid to put on a uniform if I were with an outfit that is so persistently attacked by the injury "jinx."

It was so bad with the Clevelands early in the season that almost every game took its toll in the form of an injured player. With Chapman, Leibold, Birmingham, Steen, O'Neill and Billings out at the same time, there is no difficulty in finding the reason for the club's defeats.

Take Barry, Strunk, Oldring, Schang and Lapp out of the Athletic's roster and see how many games the world's champions would grab.

REVIEW OF REAL ESTATE MARKET OF PAST WEEK

Increased Demand for Property in All Sections Marks Week's Trading.

ACTIVITY IN BACK BAY

Property all over the city—in the downtown section, in the Back Bay, and in the suburbs—figured in the burst of activity in the real estate market during the past week, one of the briskest periods of trading that has been in evidence in the real estate market in several months.

A large number of sales went to record, many of which involved property of large valuation. Not all the sales which were recorded, however, were the product of the past week. A number of deals practically closed since the middle of April were held up until the end of the month, a favorite time for definitely closing sales.

The month of April shows a slight falling off from the corresponding period during the preceding year. Last month 2,047 transfers were recorded at the Suffolk Registry of Deeds, according to the files of the Boston Real Estate Exchange, against 2,130 in 1913, and 2,403 in 1912.

BAD WEATHER A HINDRANCE.

The unseasonable weather is largely responsible for this falling off of activity. With favorable weather conditions, an improvement in the real estate business is expected.

During the past week property in the Back Bay was particularly active, and many important deals in that section were closed. One of the largest deals involved the four-story structure at No. 412 Beacon street, sold by the Charles Head estate to Fannie R. Dowse. This property is assessed for $144,000, of which $71,200 is on the 7,600 square feet of land.

Another important sale was that of a lot of land at the corner of Boylston street and Charlesgate, assessed for $194,000. The purchaser was Morris Bornstein. J. Sumner Draper and Mark Temple Dowling were the grantors. The lot contains 19,000 square feet of land.

CO-OPERATIVE BANK BIG AID IN BUILDING HOME

These Banks Established to Promote Thrift and Help People to Own Their Homes.

By ERNEST A. HALE,
Treasurer Suffolk Co-operative Bank.

The objects for which the co-operative bank was organized are often misunderstood by the people for whom they were established. In States other than Massachusetts these institutions are known as building and loan associations and saving and loan associations, thus from these other names one can readily see the use for which the co-operative bank is intended.

The co-operative bank was established to help all classes to save money and to either buy or build homes.

Many people believe that money will be advanced only to members for the purpose of constructing homes, and that loans will not be made on houses already built. As a matter of fact, the reverse of this is true in many cases, and a few banks even go so far as to refuse to lend money on houses in the course of construction, as it involves continuous watching to see that the building is constructed in accordance with the plans and specifications.

MAKE CONSTRUCTION LOANS.

Most banks, however, make loans either on buildings to be built or on buildings already built, realizing that their sphere of usefulness is measured by the number of homes that they have helped their members to acquire.

In the smaller communities, outside the large cities, the building of homes is the prime object of these institutions, as every building constructed adds to the wealth of the town and provides additional revenue in the way of taxes.

In urban centres, however, where a man usually constructs a home in the suburbs, he finds it exceedingly difficult to supervise its construction and prefers to buy a house already built, as he can then see exactly what he is getting for his money.

When a man builds a home he should employ an architect to watch the construction, otherwise the builder may deviate from the plans and produce a house which does not meet with the expectations of the owner. Inferior workmanship and materials are things that a would-be home-builder must guard against as well as many other points that the inexperienced person could not be expected to know about. So many times it is better to buy a house already built.

LIMITED AMOUNT TO LOAN.

All Co-operative Banks make loans on the installment plan by which the mortgage pays itself off without any further renewal, and in the case of a loan on a building to be constructed the money is advanced as the building progresses.

Usually these banks have only a limited amount to loan on construction mortgages, and the large part of their money is placed in first mortgages on property already built.

These institutions are organized for the sole purpose of securing money from all the members to loan to some of the members who are anxious to buy their own homes, and as a rule there is always a large demand for loans.

The conservative managers of these banks decline to loan money to the speculator, but always make a loan to a member who finds a house that meets his means and fancy.

Very often the appraisers of the Co-operative Banks safeguard the member by disclosing to him the real value of the contemplated purchase. The man of limited experience, who for the first time undertakes to buy a house, rarely knows its real value. If the location and the general plan satisfy him and if the price asked is within his means, he makes the purchase.

Hub Shows Big Growth in 4 Years

63,217 New Inhabitants for Boston Since 1910.

The estimates of the Census Bureau of the 1914 population of American cities gives Boston a favorable showing of growth in comparison with the other large Atlantic coast cities. Percentages of growth according to these estimates, as prepared by Frederick H. Viaux, secretary of the Boston Real Estate Exchange, show that New York, with 556,654 new residents, gained 11.9 per cent in population in the last four years. Boston, with 63,217 additional, gained 9.43 per cent.; Philadelphia, with 108,802 comes third with 7 per cent., and Baltimore, with only 21,105, shows but 3.78 per cent. of gain.

In the Central States Chicago shows a gain of 5.52 per cent, with 205,642 additional people, while St. Louis has added only 47,635 to her total, a gain of 6.93 per cent. Boston and St. Louis are now neck and neck and if the same percentages are maintained for the remainder of the decade, Boston will easily lead and take fourth place in the roll of cities without including the other three-quarters of a million of Greater Boston.

Detroit with 51,884 additional inhabitants, a 11.14 per cent. increase gets into the half million class with the help of the automobile industry. Cleveland shows up well with a gain of 78,768 equal to 14.05 per cent., which if long maintained will make her a rival in population of Boston and St. Louis. Pitsburgh shows a gain of only 30,973 persons, or 5.8 per cent.

ACTIVITY IN MORTGAGE MART DURING APRIL

Savings Banks and Trustees Show Increased Preference for Mortgage Investments.

Continued activity marked the mortgage market during the month of April. This activity centred particularly around large loans.

During April, 1004 mortgages with a total value of $6,560,793 were placed in Suffolk County, according to figures compiled by the Boston Real Estate Exchange. This is an increase of $1,501,012 for eighteen less mortgages over the business of the same month last year. In April, 1912, when record-breaking activity characterized the lending market, 1,129 mortgages were recorded with an aggregate valuation of $7,665,821.

Increased activity in the mortgage market in the face of somewhat lethargic conditions in other phases of the real estate business is the product of two factors—the buoyancy of the money market and the increased preference of savings banks and private investors for real estate mortgages over other securities, particularly railroad stocks and bonds.

For example, statistics show that in 1907 savings banks in Massachusetts invested $40.95 out of every hundred dollars in real estate securities. On October 31 of last year $47.70 out of every hundred dollars was invested, an increase of 16 per cent.

CHANGE OF ATTITUDE.

On the other hand, during the six years from 1907 to 1913 the investment by Massachusetts savings banks in railroad bonds and notes declined from $17.78 per one hundred dollars to $16.47, a decrease of over 7 per cent.

This changed attitudes of savings banks was caused by the increased returns from real estate loans and by the general uncertainty of the railroad security situation. Last year real estate loans by Massachusetts savings banks yielded an average rate of 4.59 per cent., against 4.258 per cent for stocks and bonds.

The attitude of savings institutions is reflected by that of private investors, who have during the past few months entered the mortgage market with large sums.

Notwithstanding the greater supply of money, rates on mortgage loans have gradually crept upward and at the present time represent an increase of from ½ to 1 per cent. over the rates during 1912 and 1913.

Port Directors Rush Work on Hub Water Front Improvements

Governor Walsh and Council Inspect New Wharf Facilities

THE GOVERNOR, HIS COUNCIL, DIRECTORS OF THE PORT AND HAMBURG-AMERICAN OFFICIALS WHO VISITED NEW HUB PIERS.

Work on the Commonwealth pier in South Boston, now occupied by the Hamburg-American line and soon to be the Boston terminal of the White Star line as well, together with the big 1,000,000-pound capacity freezers on the fish pier adjoining, the viaduct to Summer street and the other buildings owned by the State on Northern avenue, is being rushed to completion. The Port Directors hope to have the west side of the steamship pier ready for the sailing of the White Star liner Canopic on June 20.

The visit made to the piers by Governor Walsh and his Council to see what the Directors of the Port of Boston have been doing with the $9,000,000 appropriated by the State was pleasing to the State officials.

LUNCHEON FOR OFFICIALS.

Baron von Schroeder, the Boston agent of the Hamburg-American line, took advantage of the visit of the Governor and his party, including the Port Directors and other officials, to give them a complimentary luncheon on board the big liner Cleveland. The luncheon was informal. Governor Walsh expressed pleasure and surprise at what had been accomplished since his last visit to the pier, less than a year ago. He said that it seemed incredible that the great pier should be so near completed and the fish pier adjoining quite completed.

The Governor complimented Baron von Schroder on the class of ships his company was sending to Boston and said that in both his official and private capacities he would urge New England people to sail from Boston.

Chairman Hugh Bancroft of the Port Directors called attention to the fact that the pier at which the Cleveland was lying was not simply a big wharf but a great steamship terminal at which three Hamburg-American ships were lying at that time, with the west side, which would soon furnish berthing space for two more big ships, as yet uncompleted. The three ships, he said, would load 36,000 tons of freight at the pier before sailing.

Councilor Alexander McGregor proposed three cheers for Baron von Schroeder and the Hamburg-American line, and they were given with a will.

BUY DIRECT FROM FARMER IS POSTOFFICE ADVICE TO CONSUMERS OF BOSTON

Postmaster Gives City Folks Names of 615 Who Have Eggs, Butter and Produce to Sell.

Postmaster Mansfield, boosting the "parcel-post-market-gardening" plan, has issued a circular containing the names of 615 poultrymen, farmers and dairymen ready to sell eggs, butter and produce by parcel post.

The postmaster is working under directions from the department at Washington to inaugurate a system by which the parcel post will take the place of the middlemen. He believes the plan will result in a more equitable division of the consumer's dollar, of which the producer now gets between 33 and 66 per cent. Investigation shows that the cost of distribution, from producer to consumer, often approximates 50 per cent. and frequently reaches two-thirds of the amount the consumer pays.

It is because of the faulty distribution system that the farmer's prosperity is more apparent than real.

Parcel post packages come high, [illegible] necessary to use expensive material, the postoffice department not having reached the point where it provides separate bags or baskets for eggs and other breakable farm produce.

Under the parcel post system, with the postoffice bringing the producer and consumer together, the former will be on a more satisfactory basis and the consumer will know what he is getting.

In some instances parcel post packages and postage will eat up as much of the consumer's dollar as does the middleman, but the city folks, even in these cases, will have the satisfaction of knowing what they are getting.

To illustrate the cost of shipping eggs: One can ship two dozen from Stoughton to Brookline for 9 cents. The carton costs approximately 7½ cents, but it is considerably cheaper when bought in 1,000 lots.

Here is Postmaster Mansfield's list of producers who are ready to supply city consumers:

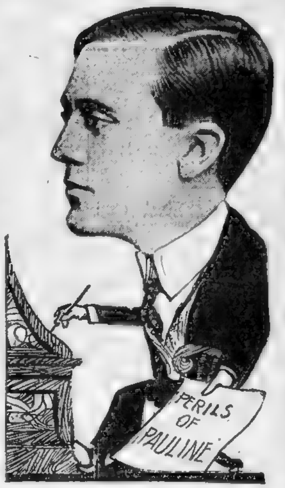
Rather Hard on Pauline

◆ ◆ ◆

Author Has No Pity



Charles W. Goddard, former Boston newspaper man, creator of "The Perils of Pauline," who is also writing Elsie Janis' next play and superintending the production of "The Misleading Lady," another of his creations, at the Colonial Theatre.

A delegation of Boston newspaper men waited upon Charles W. Goddard at the Touraine one day the past week and begged him to have a little pity for "Pauline," the latter being no less a personage than the young lady who meets and survives so many perils each week in the Boston Sunday AMERICAN and allied newspapers and who thrills thousands of people throughout the country in the moving pictures.

Pauline, as everybody knows, has suffered at the hands of terrible villains from the tropics to the frozen North. No danger is too great for her.

Mr. Goddard, who is a former Boston newspaper man, is responsible for her, and sits up nights figuring out what he'll make her do next. He allows that the thrills she has already experienced are tame to some of the things that are going to happen to her in coming reels and chapters.

"I figure out two thrilling adventures for her which no one will ever see," he said the other night.

"I had her hurled into the bowels of the earth where she met strange people and stranger animals. There certainly were some very trying situations for her there. But the Pathe picture people allowed it was rather hard to take moving pictures in the bowels of the earth and we had to cut out that chapter.

"Then in another I had her seized by a monstrous spider and dragged up into a silken web sixty feet across and imprisoned like a fly in the ordinary spider web. But the Pathe people decided that it would be rather difficult to get a spider of sufficient size to do the trick and that perfectly good chapter was canned.

"However, Pauline has plenty of wonder in that the moving picture people have been able to stage the situations I have written up to date."

Mr. Goddard has been in Boston engineering the opening of his very successful comedy "The Misleading Lady" which is presented at the Colonial Theatre tomorrow evening after a seven-months' run at the Fulton Theatre in New York City.

"I believe everybody in New York saw the show," he says. "And I sincerely hope that Bostonians will be as pleased as they."

When not writing new Pauline adventures Mr. Goddard is working on a play in which Miss Elsie Janis will appear next season.

With the sailing of the Hamburg-American liners Cleveland [illegible] thirty-six thousand tons of freight [illegible] new Commonwealth Pier in South Boston. This indicates that the freight facilities [illegible] fully up to the expectations of the architects and Port Directors.

It is of further interest to know that the big ship service of the Hamburg-American line has started off this season thirty days ahead of last year, which indicates that the slogan "Sail from Boston," used by this line is becoming more of a realization than could have been expected in such a short time.

Poultry Department

Those who dispense poultry information have learned that the feeding problem is one of the three or four most perplexing to the unexperienced. There are as many questions asked regarding how and what to feed as there are about the hatching and rearing of chicks.

Green food is one of the greatest problems of the amateur. He can not get a supply that will last during the year and many consider themselves fortunate if they have enough to feed during part of the season.

Beets, [illegible] and [illegible] be split open and hung in the poultry houses or placed in a trough so that the birds can pick them as they choose, of they can be run through a root cutter and then placed in troughs. In feeding carrots it is necessary on account of their small size to run them through a feed cutter. Sprouted oats are one of the best green feeds that can be obtained, but there is a question as to whether one can afford to feed them.

As a rule, oats that will grow well are high in price, and we do not get the full nutritive value from the oats when fed in this form, but the effect of the sprouted oats upon the digestive system will probably offset this. I believe one cannot afford the sprouted oats for layers at the price usually paid, but I think one can for breeders, as in the latter case it is not a question of the cost of the feed for them, but a question of having the hens in the best possible condition for the production of strong, fertile eggs.

It is a well-known fact that one can feed almost any rations to hens and get good results for a time, providing he feeds enough of it; but to feed in such a way that the hens will be strong and vigorous and have good appetites, and to get the most possible for the amount of feed and labor expended is another question. In other words, the time has come, with our high-priced feed, when we must feed as economically as possible.

Combination ration (grains and dry mash.)

This is perhaps the most popular ration used in feeding poultry at the present time. In feeding this ration one can give a greater variety, utilize waste products and concentrates, can determine more nearly the amount eaten, utilize bulky materials, prevent waste, and stimulate the hens.

The disadvantages of a dry mash are that we are apt to get the mash too rich, too bulky or get too much fibrous material in it, and if the hoppers are not constructed properly there will be more or less waste. It [illegible] must be taught to eat it. The advantages of a dry mash over a wet mash are that it saves labor, avoids decomposed materials, can be eaten when desired, prepared at leisure, and is more sanitary.

The grains used in this ration are the same as in ration 1, and the two following formulas for dry mashes are recommended. There is very little difference in their nutritive ratio:

Mash 1—2 parts wheat bran, 1 part wheat middlings, [illegible] meal, [illegible] part alfalfa (ground), ½ part beef scrap, ½ part oil meal, ½ part gluten meal.

Mash 2—1 part wheat bran, 1 part wheat middlings, 1 part [illegible] meal, 1 part finely ground oats, 1 part alfalfa (ground), 1 part beef scrap.

Combination ration (grains and wet mash.)

A great deal has been said regarding the harmful effects of wet mash, but Professor J. C. Graham says he believes it is not the wet mash that is injurious, but the method of feeding it. If a wet mash is used instead of a dry one, the later in the day it can be fed the better; but it is usually fed in the morning, and when so fed the [illegible] are allowed to fill up on it. Under these conditions, they sit around and are inactive the greater part of the day.

64 Per Cent. Egg Laying Record

If we are to judge by the records of the Connecticut laying contest, 64 per cent. is a good egg yield for the latter part of April.

Eight hundred and twenty birds are entered in the contest. The Plymouth Rocks and the Leghorns were tied for first place in the breed records during the third week, each laying an average of 70 per cent.

These figures are interesting from many points of view, as they enable the poultry keeper to gain a good idea of the laying standard of his own flocks. If the everyday poultryman cannot keep [illegible] records, he at least can [illegible] flock averages.

The table below indicates the breeds, the number of individuals, the number of eggs laid and the per cent yield for the week.

60 Plymouth Rocks	294	70
100 Wyandottes	460	66
150 Rhode Island Reds	654	62
280 Leghorns	1336	67
100 Miscellaneous	403	58
50 Experimental Rocks	201	58
50 Experimental Leghorns	258	70
820	3552	64

A. E. Brundage's pen of Rhode Island Reds from Danbury, Conn., and an experimental pen of White Leghorns owned by the Storrs Experimental Station tied for place with 56 eggs each. The Reds, however, are credited with first place as this experimental pen is not in competition.

The following five pens all tied for second place with a yield of 55 eggs each: Frank L. Tuttle, Southboro, Mass., Barred Rocks; Waveny Farm, New Canaan, Conn., Barred Rocks; National Columbian Wyandotte Club; Francis F. Lincoln, Mt. Carmel, Conn., White Leghorns; Charles Heigl, Rocky River, Ohio, White Leghorns. Two pens tied for third place with a yield of 54 eggs each, viz.: A. B. Hall, Wallingford, Conn., Barred Rocks; Storrs Experiment Station, White Leghorns. Hall's Leghorns followed his pen of Barred Rocks and the Station's pen of Leghorns very closely with a production of 53 eggs for the week.

Twenty-five individuals, including Barred, White and Buff Rocks; White and Buff Wyandottes; Rhode Island Reds, White and Buff Leghorns; Buff Orpingtons, and "Hens" proved to be everyday layers during the week, each of these individuals being credited with 7 eggs.

Tom Barron's White Wyandottes continue to lead with a total of 1,032 eggs. First ten positions in the honor list are held by White Wyandottes, White Leghorns, S. C. Rhode Island Reds and Barred Rocks.

300 LICE Or More on One Hen

is by no means uncommon. No one would expect to fatten a steer with that number of "ticks" sucking his blood, but many expect the old hen to go ahead shelling out eggs while lice and mites are sapping her very life. We have counted over 2000 dead lice under a row of ten hens, on a roost board painted the night before with Lee's Lice Killer. This great killer does double duty—contact kills mites, lice, bedbugs, etc. about the roosts; the vapor kills lice on the chickens sitting over it. Put up only in airtight cans. For sale at over 10,000 towns.

CITIZENS DESIRE TO KNOW WHERE IS CURLEY'S ECONOMY IN THE LIGHTING CONTRACT

Discredited Professor Jackson Behind Chamber's Statement of "Fair Price."

The pocket books of the people of Boston are so greatly affected by the price which they will have to pay for lighting their public streets that not even war and rumors of war have totally eclipsed the public interest in the contracts with he Consolidaed Gas Company and the Edison Electric Light Company which Mayor Curley wants the city to sign.

These contracts would commit the city to a total expenditure of $6,800,000.00 (six million eight hundred thousand dollars)

The contracts must be approved by the City Council before they become binding upon Boston. The City Council has held a hearing on each contract. The weakness of Mr. Curley's electric light contract, both in the loose and careless manner in which it was drawn up and in the high price which it would oblige the city to pay was made apparent by the members of the City Council and by some of those who represented the quasi-public bodies at the hearing.

WHERE IS "ECONOMY?"

The Public Lighting Service Company at this hearing was told that it was prepared to do the same kind of lighting for more than seven hundred thousand dollars less cost to the city than Mr. Curley wants the city to pay.

The citizens are wondering what has become of Mayor Curley's boasted economy.

They are puzzled to understand why a dollar saved at the expense of the Edison Electric Light Company is not as good to the city as a dollar saved at the expense of the firemen, policemen, clerks and city laborers.

Professor Monroe, representing the Chamber of Commerce, showed how carelessly of the city's interest the Mayor and his Superintendent of St[illegible] Rourke had permitted the contract to be drawn.

The statement of the representative of the Chamber of Commerce that the price of the electric lights under the proposed contract surprised everybody. It developed, however that their idea of fairness of the price was obtained by consulting with the somewhat notorious Donald C. Jackson of the Institute of Technology.

JACKSON'S RECORD.

The reputation which this alleged expert has acquired throughout the country was probably unknown to the committee, but the people of Boston ought to know about it, and especially the members of the Chamber of Commerce and particularly the committee on public lighting of the Chamber of Commerce.

George W. Anderson, distinguished lawyer and member of the Railroad Commission, recently made a few very interesting remarks concerning Professor Jackson's testimony in behalf of the Electric Light Company of the city of Haverhill. Mr. Anderson said

Professor Donald C. Jackson is professor of electrical engineering in the Institute of Technology. He said that he had never testified as an expert in the gas case before; and I suggest that, out of regard for his own reputation and that of the institution of which he is a member, he should never so testify again.

"KNEW NEXT TO NOTHING"

Before I had finished with him on cross-examination, I found that he knew next to nothing about gas meters. It is no wonder that the Highway Commission is in trouble, when it has as adviser an alleged expert who, in dealing between public utility and user, takes the cost when the cost is higher, and the value when the value is more than the cost—so that the consumer must lose, and cannot profit, out of the reproduction-value theory.

I eliminate from serious discussion gas experts Chase and Jackson. A prettier pair of parroting posers were never presented for the purpose of promoting or protecting the perpetration of any predatory project. It is no wonder that Mr. Tyler in effect abondoned these two witnesses in his final argument and put distress on his claims upon what Mr. Prichard of the Lynn Gas Company said.

The Boston Post, four years ago, denounced Professor Jackson as a telephone expert.

Chicago had an investigation which was conducted, as was supposed, on behalf of the city by Jackson. He had as his assistants a certain firm of accountants. Suddenly it was discovered that these accountants were also in the employ of the very telephone company which Mr. Jackson was investigating. The public authorities, thereupon, decided that they would have another investigation independent of Mr. Jackson, and it was fortunate for Chicago that they did so. Jackson reported a deficit in that year on business within the city limits of nearly a million dollars. The new expert by the city found that instead of a deficit of almost a million dollars, the telephone company had a surplus of nearly three hundred thousand dollars, a little mistake on the part of Professor Jackson in the interest of the telephone company of the small sum of one million two hundred and seventeen thousand dollars for a single year.

JACKSON DISCREDITED.

The city decided to reduce the rates on the strength of the report of the second expert. As a result of the protest by the telephone against the report of the second expert. Chicago employed Professor Bemis to make a third investigation. Professor Bemis not only confirmed the report of Mr Hagenah, the second expert, but discovered what Mr. Hagenah himself had discovered, that the company by a systematical scheme of overcharging subscribers had netted about four million and a half dollars, which had increased its dividends secretly to ten percent so much for Professor Jackson in Chicago.

In Baltimore, they had a like experience with this Professor Jackson.

The city of Minneapolis also had a like experience

The petitioners for lower telephone rates in Baltimore quoted with approval an editorial which the Boston AMERICAN published on February 8, 1913, concerning Professor Jackson's unfitness

Le the reader keep in mind that Mayor Curley wants the city to pay $87.53 a lamp a year under this contract. Then let him consider the prices which other cities of the United States are paying.

FIGURES TELL FACTS.

If the Mayor had made as good a contract with the electric light company as the people of Toledo enjoy, it would cost Boston nearly two million dollars less than it would cost under the contract the Mayor proposed.

These American cities get their lighting less than it would cost Boston under the Mayor's contract by the sum set opposite their names.

"FIN. COM." PROBE.

It is not at all likely that the City Council will let Mr. Curley "put over" this deal. They have shown some very independent signs. And besides it is said that John R. Murphy, chairman of the Finance Commission is quietly investigating, and so is the Public Improvement Association and the Public Franchise League.

Those who know the personal of the present City Council belives that they will never assent to so important a contract without a most thorough investigation with he aid of a reliable exper.

FITZGERALD "HOT SHOT" ON "ECONOMY" OF CURLEY

Here are a few "slings and arrows" launched by our former Mayor against our present Mayor in this week's issue of the Republic, Mr Fitzgerald's paper:

* * *

"The Mayor's pretended interest in the fire prevention laws is amusing to those who know that his support has been given the last two years to various real estate builders and agents in Dorchester who have filled that district with three-flatters."

* * *

"Professor William B. Munro, chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, says of the electric light contract submitted to the Council by Mayor Curley

"'This is, without exception, the worst contract between a city and a lighting company I have ever seen. It is ambiguous, loosely drawn and misleading. The price is not as low as the city ought to ask for, and is not as low as the city ought to ask for, and is not as low as the city should get.'

"This contract was O. K'd by John A. Sullivan, Corporation Counsel. Just imagine what Mr. Sullivan would say as Chairman of the Finance Commission if this kind of contract had been submitted by Mr. Fitzgerald. How times have changed! What a price the city is paying in order that John A. Sullivan might be provided with a nine thousand dollar job."

* * *

"Mayor Curley said at the Mayors' Club that if anyone had told him a year before that the City Hall expenses could be cut nearly a million dollars he would not have believed it. Yet, he said, the figures show that a saving of $900,000 has been made. To those who know Mayor Curley's activities in politics the last fifteen years the remark is laughable."

* * *

"None of the Mayor's 'economies,' in our opinion, commends itself to the judgment of the average citizen. We would advise the Mayor, in his discussions before clubs and organizations, to get some other topic that would be more appealing. The Mayor should know by this time that he is a joke as an economist."

* * *

"We hope that in the further use of his beloved 'axe' Mayor Curley will consider public sentiment in regard to the soldier of the flag, in any war."

* * *

"The reaction against City Hall 'economies' which don't economize, and which may have very dangerous consequences, is becoming marked. Dr. Richard C. Cabot is out in a letter to The Herald against the $600-a-year district nurses, and the suppression of the office of vital statistician on the Board of Health. Katharine B. Codman of Beacon street, of the Instructive District Nursing Association, follows Dr. Cabot on the same lines, noting that 'economy does not always lie in the obvious direction of salary reduction.'"

ALL SAUGUS MOURNS FOR FRANCES SIMS

Death of High School Valedictorian Regarded as a Tragedy by Old and Young.

Down in Saugus people have pretty sober faces these days. Over the town still hangs a cloud of sorrow since the death of Frances Sims, a sixteen-year-old high school girl, known and loved by every man and woman in the place.

Her death was a tragedy of childhood. The girl was the daughter of William F. Sims, superintendent of the schools. She was a brilliant scholar and at the same time was a light-hearted, cheerful favorite with boys and girls in the senior class.

Not long ago she was elected valedictorian of her class for the coming Commencement. The child's cup of joy was full. Then came the Saugus school strike, when she was torn between affection and loyalty for her comrades who had quit the school and her duty to her father—the superintendent. It was this grief and the strain of her study, they say, which led to her death. Heart trouble was the cause.

The esteem in which the girl was held in Saugus was eloquently told when the whole town went to her home at No. 15 Emory street and to the Congregational Church to attend her funeral. The Rev. Lynn B. Farnsworth paid this tribute to her memory:

"TO KNOW HER, TO LOVE HER."

"Words fall far short of doing justice to the life of this child whom God in his wisdom and mercy has seen fit to call unto Him. We who knew her loved her, for the love and charity which she displayed for her comrades and schoolmates.

"To know her was to love her. Her Christian spirit seemed to make itself felt wherever she would go, and in the midst of life's struggle when her health was not the best she was ever brave and cheerful.

"Her life has been one that the youth of the town, and the State also, may well emulate with credit to themselves and honor to her memory

"During the time I have known her I have met few young folks who aimed so high or strove so hard to attain her ideals.

"She performed each day's task nobly and well, and when the call came she, like a true Christian girl, went forth to meet Him. Her earthly labor was done. God in his wisdom called unto her, and she has departed."

Her former schoolmates, with the members of the graduating class leading the procession, marched from the school to the church, where they were present at the service and gazed for the last time upon her face. The pall-bearers were Horace Ramsdell and Robert Haskell, representing the Sunday school of of which she was a member; Ellory Metcalf, and Percy Evans, of the High School Athletic Association; Herbert R. Millbury and Chester Nicholson of the senior class.

CHURCH PACKED TO DOORS.

The little church was filled to the doors with the sorrowing townfolk. The services were simple and impressive. At the close of the eulogy members of the Beacon Light Society passed before the casket and each placed a rose upon it.

The body was carried to Lynn, where it was placed aboard the Portland train, and sent to that city, to be buried in the lot of her mother's family. Floral pieces were sent to Mr. and Mrs. Sims by the Saugus school committee, former schoolmates, teachers at Saugus High and Grammar schools, and from the town Selectmen and other town officers.

Must Clean Up the Exits at Subway

So many protests have reached the Mayor's office about the unsightly appearance of the subway exits and entrances in Tremont street that the Mayor has ordered the Transit Commission to have the structure rebronzed or at least treated to a bath of soap and water. The Mayor intimated that he thought the Transit Commission might do that much toward the general "paint-up and clean-up" campaign.

COMISKEY CONFIRMED.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—The Senate today confirmed the nomination of Michael S. Comiskey of Plymouth, Mass., as postmaster.

BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL NEWS Edited By Experts

Profit Taking Had a Bearish Influence

Stocks were weaker yesterday, there being considerable profit-taking. At the opening the recession averaged small and after a semblance of a rally prices ruled irregular for awhile. Later realization sales depressed the list and in the last hour a number of leaders went to their lowest. For awhile at the opening and a little later, the New York market was surprisingly strong considering the fact that in London Americans had sold lower. Anaconda and Norfolk & Western were the weakest on the other side, while Canadian Pacific sustained a substantial decline. It is reported that London was more pessimistic in its view of the Mexican situation, and was also somewhat disturbed by conditions on the Continent

Missouri Pacific was an interesting issue in New York, declining to 18⅞ and rising to 20. It closed unchanged One statement from New York read

"It can be stated with authority that George J. Gould has offered his and the estate's holding of Missouri Pacific stock at an attractive enough price to interest bankers."

The statement by an expert that the Rock Island system would need $60,000,000 within five years was what sent common and preferred downward. The common closed at 2½ and the preferred at 4½. The weakness of Lehigh Valley was regarded as sympathetic.

While the majority of issues closed lower in New York there were a number to show gains. Illinois Central on a small transaction advanced 2⅞. Business in Steel was comparatively moderate in volume. It was down to 59 at the end. Coppers had weakened, Amalgamated losing 1 and Utah Copper 1⅛. Transactions for the session did not total 150,000.

The big market was not interesting as a whole. Its undertone seemed bullish. The opinion is spreading that Eastern roads will be granted the freight rate raise they have asked for. The Brandeis statement that their revenues are less than they should be to insure their prosperity had great weight with traders. The Mexican situation was of little importance as a market factor.

The Boston market was quiet and at the close the list was irregular. Among the strongest issues were American Woolen preferred and Massachusetts Electric preferred. Butte & Superior and Greene-Cananea were weak among the mines. Business in that class of stocks was not impressive. New Haven finished at 69¾, off 1¼.

One announcement from New York was that gold bars to the amount of $1,000,000 had been engaged for shipment to Paris. But the money market was practically unchanged, and with war talk subsiding there was less fear of a stiffening of rates.

Reports concerning the country's business in general were no more encouraging than have been heard for weeks. Sentiment was more hopeful, however. It is reasoned that large crops are probable and that nothing could be of more value for business expansion, unless it might be something which would make such a change in the policy of the Wilson administration as to inspire confidence on the part of the constructive elements in trade and finance.

Old Cotton Crop Has Been Marketed

Year's Consumption Now Estimated at 14,800,000 Bales.

By EDWARD LOW RANLETT.

NEW YORK, May 2.—The statistical position of cotton may be summarized in the opinion that the old crop practically has been marketed. Consumers have either taken their full quota of the crop, or have made contracts for the remaining four months of the season, which will nearly, if not quite supply their needs.

Current estimates of the year's consumption approximate 14,800,000 bales of 500 pounds each. These figures would force the world's consumers to invade their reserved stocks and would leave the visible supply markets with a total little over last year's figures of about 1,000,000 bales. Much of this carrying-over will be of low grade, and new crop deliveries for this reason meet a strong market at rising prices from present levels. The market may, from time to time, be influenced by crop condition news, but in the final equation, unless a giant crop is promised, there is no reason for lower prices for the staple.

Crop conditions as generally reported on May 1 are backward. Cold weather and excess of rain have been the principal drawbacks. The use of fertilizers for the entire cotton belt will probably exceed last season's total by 6 per cent. This estimate however, covers its use for other crops, notably tobacco and grains. A moderate increase in the total acreage appears to be contemplated, perhaps not exceeding 2 per cent.

One Chicago Concern Controls May Wheat

Corn Prices Decline, but Recessions Show Good Buying.

By JOSEPH F. PRITCHARD.

CHICAGO, May 2.—May wheat at Chicago is owned by one concern, which is also in control of a goodly portion of the cash wheat held here.

The reader, however, must not make up his mind that May wheat is to sell at a sensational advance, because this will not be permitted by the rules of the big trade mart.

The corn market it attracting less attention than for many weeks Prices have declined, but on all the recessions there has been good buying.

COPPER METAL.

Less buying of copper metal took place yesterday, it is reported, but sales for the week are believed to have totalled 50,000,000 pounds. Buying began when the largest sellers cut their price to 14½ cents a pound. The business at that level was sufficient to cause an advance to 14⅝

Visible supplies of the metal on May 1, according to the compilation of Henry R. Merton & Co. of London, were 23,363 tons, an increase of 1,497 tons since the middle of April. This total includes the amount afloat from Chile, but not from the United States

At Rotterdam, Hamburg and Bremen visible supplies on May 1 showed an increase of 578 tons during the fortnight, the total being 8,944 tons, against 8,366 tons on April 15. The increase was made up of a 300 ton gain at Rotterdam, a 274 ton increase at Hamburg and a four ton increase at Bremen.

GRAIN PRICES.

CHICAGO, May 2.—May wheat closed strong and [illegible] higher. Corn was [illegible] and oats [illegible] higher. Hog products were fractionally better. Prices were COTTON PRICES.

NEW YORK, May 2.—A clearing weather map indicated a great deal of liquidation at the opening of the cotton market. Local traders and houses with New Orleans connection supplied cotton freely. First prices ranged from three points lower to two points higher, the slight gain being caused by the unexpectedly good showing of the Liverpool cables. Prices were:

MONEY MARKET.

No alteration in the money market is to be reported. Since the war scare subsided there has been less fear of an advance in rates. Funds are plenty and the demand for them is small. Bankers are awaiting a settlement of the Mexican situation and an expansion of business. It is thought that large crops would surely have great effect upon the latter. There is hope in financial circles, too, that railroad earnings will increase. Current rates are:

KEYNOTE IN BUSINESS AND FINANCE THIS WEEK IS "IF"

Forbes Points Out Conditions Which Would Make for Improvements—Actual Situation Is Shown to Tend Toward a Distinctly Dangerous Future—Straws Which Shows How the Winds Are Blowing.

By B. C. FORBES,
Business Editor.

"If" must be the keynote of this week's article covering business and financial prospects.

Fundamental and also stock market conditions would warrant a remarkable transformation from pessimism and depression to optimism and prosperity.

B. C. FORBES

IF a satisfactory peace be established in Mexico—which is still doubtful and of overshadowing importance;

IF the Interstate Commerce Commission grants the Eastern railroads substantial relief—which is very probable;

IF President Wilson ignores politics in selecting Federal Reserve Board members—which he likely will;

IF the crop outlook continues as promising as it is now—which at least can be hoped;

IF Congress postpones its haphazard anti-business proposals; and

IF the tariff does not seriously cripple numbers of our leading industries—a matter of grave moment and one the public does not justly appreciate

Given peace, the chances would favor marked recovery in trade and in investments, as most of the other impending developments are likely to prove encouraging.

That sums up the whole position.

The need for a revival in confidence and in activity becomes more urgent every day. Things are drifting into a distinctly dangerous condition.

Here are straws showing how the industrial and financial winds are blowing

CHEAP LABOR A MENACE.

Foreign manufacturers are flooding this country with cheap labor goods at a rate never before experienced.

Exports are not increasing.

European investors have resold perhaps $250,000,000 worth of American stocks formerly held by them, and will sell a great deal more if the railroads are not given tangible and immediate succor.

Gold exports on a heavy scale will follow these developments unless burdensome borrowing by the United States government for war purposes forces up interest rates here.

Steel and copper prices are falling. The United States Steel Corporation suffered a deficit, after the regular dividends, of fully $6,000,000 last quarter.

Railroad development has virtually ceased. The Baldwin Locomotive Company is today employing less than 8,000 men, which contrasts with upward of 17,000 one year ago—a cut of more than 50 per cent

New England mills are curtailing production.

TRADE RECESSION SPREADS.

The trade recession following well-established precedent, is moving westward. Complaints now come from the Middle West, heretofore cheerful

"Hesitancy is general in anticipating forward requirements," says Dun's trade review, which usually strives to be optimistic.

Yet the exercise of common sense by Washington could work wonders.

The soil was never in better condition at the opening of May, and our farmers, if all goes well, will utilize their increased knowledge to raise harvests never equalled by this or any other nation. Bountiful harvests form, of course, the most solid base for prosperity.

RAILROADS NEED HELP.

The lifting of the shadow that has lain across the railroad world for many trying months would brighten sentiment in high places at home and restore some of Europe's aforetime faith in the ability of this country to regulate its affairs intelligently

Industrial and mercantile interests have kept so close to shore during the last year or more that they are in a position to respond with alacrity to any announcement from the administration that none of the weird anti-business bills under consideration will be passed this Summer

Credit inflation has been rectified in most directions, but if there be no revival of trade very shortly the commercial mortality list, already distressingly long, cannot fail to be seriously lengthened. The railroads and Wall Street firms would doubtless figure in the record.

AGITATION MAY SPREAD.

The appalling events in Colorado and the "ind" demonstrations of professional and semi-professional labor agitators do not reflect general labor conditions, although the position may become grave if the administration and its minions persist in policies calculated to aggravate unemployment and its attendant unrest and ugly discontent.

There never was more pressing need for constructive, broad-guage, common sense statesmanship.

Can President Wilson and his advisers rise to the occasion?

Or will short-sighted political huggermuggering prevail, precipitating the country into distress that may beget a state of mind not to be courted by those in power at the nation's Capitol?

The answer—a decisive, mayhap epochal one—should come within the next thirty days.

Grand fathers are really necessary. Some people have nothing to recommend them or to brag about except their grand fathers. They are as proud of their grandfathers as though they had picked them out. I was born in this town. I picked it out to be born in because it is a nice town and besides my parents live here. But I never gave a thought to picking out my grandpa. But I love him. His disposition is n't clear up to the mark but he affords me a lot of fun and is a valuable member of the cast

SCIENCE EXPLAINS WHY WOMEN DO SUCH FOOLISH THINGS

How the Most Remarkable Peculiarities of Modern Women Can Be Directly Traced to Cave Age Customs

"She weeps at weddings because she remembers the primitive time when all weddings were tragedies."

"And every year some new fashion comes to remind us that woman is still a savage."

SCIENCE is beginning to explain the little peculiarities of the fair sex. Just why woman steps off a car backwards, why she wears long hair, why she wears shoes several sizes too small for her, why she takes half an hour to put her hat on straight and other familiar peculiarities are at last made clear by the great searchlight of science.

Most of these things have puzzled men; have sometimes given then cause for mirth and sometimes for other forms of comment. Now we know that they are connected with the origins of the human race, with the age when we lived in trees, with the later period when man acquired his wives by capture, and with that shadowy time when woman did all the work of the race.

Such scientists as Professor Simon Nelson Patten, of the University of Pennsylvania; Professor Frederick Starr, of the University of Chicago; Dr. Max Baff, of Clark University, and Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman have devoted their labors to elucidating these problems.

Mrs. Gilman is not an ordinary scientist, but she may be termed a scientific observer of the relations of the sexes. In a recent series of lectures Mrs. Gilman explained why women were usually smaller and weaker than men, although nature intended them to be equal.

"This ideal of small women," said Mrs. Gilman, "came from the fact that the small and weak woman was much easier to manage. In primitive times the swiftest men caught the most women and the swiftest women escaped the most men. That bred a race from slow women."

"Woman's devotion to paint and feathers is distinctly traceable to the social customs of the Cave Age.

Following Mrs. Gilman's statement a well-known scientific writer, perhaps in a spirit of satire, pointed to other peculiarities of woman that might be traced to primitive conditions.

"Why," he asked, "does a woman invariably turn backward when getting off a street car, thereby running the risk of being thrown to the ground and seriously injured? It is because her most impressive experience in primitive days was being stolen violently by some man and carried away, thrown over his shoulders. Thus her face was turned toward her childhood home, the cave from which she had been ruthlessly torn. Thus it is that woman's face is now always turned toward the place from which she came."

Then again, why are women usually long-haired and men usually short-haired? The primitive man, the man of the cave age, when he went wife-hunting naturally seized his victims by the hair. This action would have been particularly natural if he were on horseback and picking up the women as he rode. Thus the long-haired women were invariably captured, while the short-haired ones escaped. So in time a race of long-haired women grew up and the short-haired ones died out.

Why, too, do we find that a woman prefers to wear tight shoes? The earliest form of footgear was a kind of sandal, and this was used very early in the development of prehistoric man. The fleet-footed maiden, who wore easy sandals, would have easily escaped capture by the primitive man in search of wives. On the other hand, the one with tight sandals would have been forced to totter about slowly, and would have been easily captured by the man. Thus the race of women wearing tight shoes was bred. Man, realizing the usefulness of the tight shoes, pretended to admire them when worn by woman, and helped to perpetuate the race of half-crippled women.

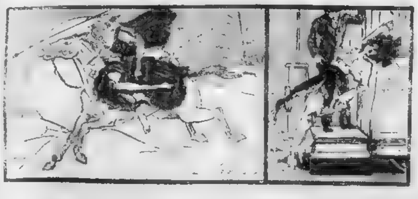
Why does woman take so long to get ready, and why is she usually late at the theatre? The prehistoric woman who loitered outside the family cave was generally the one caught by the wife-hunter. Thus her characteristics came to be handed down to her present day descendants.

Why does a woman usually weep at a wedding? This the professor explains, is also a result of the system of marriage by capture. When a woman was captured by force she naturally wept at her wedding, and the custom has become an instinct in the fair sex.

Why does a woman keep everybody waiting while she buys a ticket, and why does she love to block up the aisle of a railroad car? Because in her original condition she was accustomed to being carried about by a man, and now she feels helpless when travelling by herself.

These interesting conclusions are in harmony with those formulated by Dr. Max Baff, of Clark University Worcester, Mass., who says that woman in her dress adornments and many of her customs is essentially a savage. His argument is that these characteristics were stamped upon woman in the primitive period, and, being kept in subjection to man, she has had less opportunity than he has to rid herself of them in response to the stimulus of advancing civilization.

"The American, the Parisian, the German and the Swedish woman—all exhibit the characteristics of our primitive ancestors. When we look at some of the hats our American women wear we cannot but think of the ostrich, the chicken or the hen. It brings us back to the days of our ancestors, when feathers were worn by man," writes the Professor.



"Why does woman always step off a car backwards? Because, when captured by the primitive cave-man, who threw her over his shoulder, her glance naturally turned backwards."

"Every year some new fashion comes to remind us that woman is still a savage. Do they not love to wear little stuffed nightingales, skylarks, thrushes and othe song birds as ornaments?

"And the paint, the war paint of the Sioux and the Mohawks, the savage love of gaudy colors, is generally displayed by woman. Although it is admitted that all women do not paint, still the fact remains that women do paint.

"Feathers and paint—these alone would enable a student of history to make a diagnosis of a savage. The diagnosis is further strengthened when we look at the masses of metal and stone called jewelry with which women adorn themselves. All these things indicate long continued mental concentration on the pleasures of personal adornment—a concentration of mind that has, in my opinion, helped to retard the progress of women.

"Feathers, paint, beads and bracelets, and long hair! Surely now we have, psychologically speaking, made a savage. The long hair, the glory of woman, the strength of Samson, the sign of the savage! The glory of woman, they say, is her hair. As a physician, it is my contention that it takes blood and nerve to nourish the long hair of women, and therefore the less hair on our women the more strength to their intellect. Long hair, arranged in fantastic shapes, frequently made more grotesque by artificial means—is this the glory of women? Certainly it is the glory of the savage

"Feathers, paint, beads and bracelets and long hair take us back to a period of history when men and women were wont to practice primitive strategy; when men used the dead bodies of birds for personal adornments. To-day the barnyard fowl, that lacks the aesthetic suggestion of the forests, does service on the hats of our ladies. That is keeping us in the age of the savage."

Why is it that woman wears the expensive, elaborate and often useless dress so picturesquely described by Professor Baff? This question has been partly answered by Professor G. T. W. Patrick, who says that woman has never rid herself of the primitive idea that dress is a mark of wealth rather than a mere protection for the body.

"The dress of the primitive man was loosely and irregularly attached to the body, and was fastened with strings or thongs, or afterwards with pins of metal," writes the Professor. "Later these pins were attached to the garment and bent into the form of hooks. Buckles, and finally buttons, took the place of the primitive pins and hooks.

"But women still use the metal pins, and the primitive lack of definite correspondence between the dress and the body is seen, for instance, in the hat or bonnet which does not fit the head, and must be fastened on with strings or pins. This retarded development and absence of differentiation in women's dress is curiously illustrated in the case of shoes. Only a few decades ago girls' and women's shoes were made straight and worn indiscriminately on either foot, while men's shoes were uniformly made rights and lefts. But the most striking case of retarded development in women's dress is seen in the persistence of the idea that dress is not so much a protection for the body is a symbol of the wealth of the wearer or the wearer's family."

Undoubtedly we are witnessing to-day a larger participation by woman in the work of men than has ever been known in civilized times. Does this mean that woman is now progressing to a state of complete equality with man? Professor Frederick Starr, the noted professor of anthropology in the University of Chicago, says it does not. He says that man has temporarily lost his superiority, but believes he will recover it.

"Woman by nature is unequal to man in the development of those qualities which make for human progress. She never has distinguished herself by important discoveries in any line of science," says Professor Starr.

"The elements of sex superiority were fixed back in the vegetable kingdom, and she cannot overcome them. She is conspicuous in affairs now only because she is playing an inevitable part in a great race experiment, in which the activities of man have been temporarily abridged."

Why does marriage so often prove a failure? Professor Simon Nelson Patten, the distinguished professor of political economy in the University of Pennsylvania, is bold enough to declare that it is because woman does not do enough work and does not contribute sufficiently to the family income. Perhaps these characteristics are also inherited from the days when the husband stole his wife and had to keep her—otherwise she would have run away.

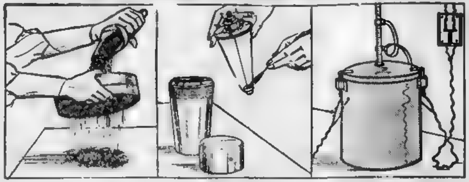
A New Way to REDUCE YOUR COAL BILLS

By Paying for the HEAT UNITS Coal Supplies Instead of for What It WEIGHS You Can Often SAVE FIFTY PER CENT



"Samples of the coal are first ground and screened through a sieve."

"The powdered coal is placed in a steel bomb containing oxygen enough for 300 pounds' pressure."

The bomb is placed in a tank of water and its contents fired. The rise in the temperature of the water shows how many heat units in the coal."

A VERY effective plan to cut its coal bills has been worked out by the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, which operates the subway and elevated railways in New York City. The best part about it is that it is one which might very well be followed for the benefit of the public at large.

The Interborough uses about 800 tons of coal a day, buying it by the ton just the same as the individual householder, who uses possibly ten tons a year. But it doesn't pay for its coal in the same way. It pays only for what it gets out of the coal in the way of actual heat. In other words, it buys by quantity, but pays strictly according to quality.

The ordinary citizen orders a ton of coal, and as long as he gets a load weighing 2,000 pounds is quite contented. As a matter of fact, of course, instead of being 100 per cent coal, the mass delivered may be only 60 per cent coal and 40 per cent dirt, slate, water and other useless constituents. The fact that the Interborough has reduced its coal consumption 41 per cent since it installed its new system of purchasing coal ought to have a lot of significance for the ordinary householder, who pays for his coal by weight and never considers quality

The coal used by the Interborough is delivered in barges containing approximately 800 tons apiece. The coal is weighed as delivered, but although the price is fixed at so much a ton, just as it is when an individual buys it, the amount the company pays for it depends not upon its weight, but upon the results of tests to which it subjects it. It has got to be up to standard or deductions are made. When the Interborough buys coal it wants heat, not weight, and the tests it applies are calculated to reveal just how much heat the coal in question will furnish.

From every 3,500 pounds of coal taken out of the barge a sample cube six inches square is taken. The sample cubes, of which there are about 500, are thoroughly mixed, halved and quartered, and the process of mixing, halving and quartering is repeated until about fifteen pounds of coal, no piece of which is more than one-quarter of an inch in diameter, is obtained This is put through a grinder and comes out about the size of coarse sand

The sample is then put through what is known as the Riffle Sampler, a contrivance which separates it into two portions, and the mass is run through this sampler until only one pound is left of each portion. A pound of the coal in this condition is then ground until it is fine enough to run through a 60-mesh sieve—a sieve the wires of which run sixty to the inch each way. The coal by this time is finely powdered, and four ounces are taken for the actual test.

These four ounces are as nearly representative of the 800 tons delivered by the barge as it is possible to secure. About one gram of the powder is placed in a platinum-lined steel bomb containing oxygen enough to produce 300 pounds pressure. This contrivance is known as the Atwater bomb calorimeter. The bomb is then put in a tank containing about three pints of water, and the little pan of coal which it contains is ignited by electricity, a fine filament which connects with the pan conveying the current.

The burning of the coal raises the temperature of the water in the tank, and a standard thermometer scientifically adjusted in the tank registers the actual rise to 1 2000th part of a degree.

According to the United States Bureau of Standards one gram of coal ought to produce 8,000 small calories, equivalent to 14,400 British thermal units (B. T. U.'s), which would be enough to raise the temperature of the water in the tank 3 8-10 degrees Centigrade.

A B. T. U., it may be explained, is the amount of heat necessary to raise the temperature of one pound of water one degree Fahrenheit.

If the coal tested is below standard, the fact is at once disclosed by the standard thermometer. By observing just how many degrees the temperature of the water is raised it is possible to tell how many heat units the sample of coal furnishes, and from that to figure the heating value of the whole cargo.

The difference in the number of heat units supplied by different barge-loads of coal is considerable. Sometimes there is as much as 1,000 B. T. U.'s variance between the number of heat units the coal in question will give and the number of units the same amount of standard coal would give. If the difference is in favor of the coal company—in other words, if the coal is above standard—the company is credited with the additional heat units, but if the coal is below standard the company is penalized accordingly, the rate in each case being one cent per ton for every fifty B. T. U.'s difference.

Suppose, for instance, the 800 tons of coal is bought at $3.30 per ton. The coal company renders a bill for $2,640. The tests show that instead of furnishing 14,400 B. T. U.'s to the gram the coal will furnish only 13,400 —a difference of 1,000 B. T. U.'s. In that event, the company would pe penalized one cent per ton for every 50 B. T. U.'s, or a total penalty of $160.

The apparatus used for these tests is somewhat elaborate and much too expensive for the average householder to possess, but in view of the efficient check it enables the coal consumer to keep on the coal dealer, such testing apparatus ought to be generally available

This could be done by providing central testing stations, just as in New York and a number of other cities public weighing stations have long been established. In the cities referred to it is now possible for the coal purchaser to compel the coal dealer to have every wagonload of coal officially weighed at one of the weighing stations, but, as has been demonstrated by the Interborough, merely weighing coal does not afford sufficient protection to the consumer. The municipal testing station would, therefore, seem to be the logical solution of this phase of the coal-bill problem.

But there is another phase of the question. When coal is delivered it is usually found to be wet. If complaint is made, the coal-wagon driver will explain that it is necessary to wet the coal in order to keep down the dust, and to some extent that may be true. As a matter of fact, however, coal is very often wetted down to such an extent that the water represents five per cent or over of the entire weight, and that is unnecessary

The Interborough has provided against this fraud by subjecting all coal purchased to a test which discloses the amount of moisture it contains. The Interborough does not believe in paying for water when it wants coal, and refuses to allow more than four per cent water in soft coal. It allows none at all in hard coal.

To test the amount of water in the coal, a small sample is taken from each 200 pounds at it comes off the barge, and, after being weighed, it is placed in a specially constructed oven and subjected to a temperature of 107 degrees Centigrade for a period of three hours. At the end of that time all moisture is supposed to have evaporated, and the coal is taken out and weighed again, the difference between the final and the original weights showing the amount of moisture originally contained by the coal. The company is penalized for all excess water

The Interborough uses some 236,000 tons of coal a year and is naturally interested in getting the most out of it. It pays only for what it gets

The individual consumer ought to be equally concerned, even though his annual coal bill is infinitesimal compared with that of the great public service corporations. As long as we have to pay for coal we might as well be sure that it is coal we are getting and not slate or dirt or water.

The public testing station would seem to be the logical way to cut the public's coal bills, which of late have been growing larger and larger.

Why MEN TAKE OFF THEIR HATS TO WOMEN

WE consider a man a gentleman who takes off his hat to a lady. At least the act is thought to be gentlemanly, polite. The origin of this custom, like so many other customs common among so-called civilized peoples, goes back to primitive times.

When a person was made captive his conqueror stripped him of his weapons and clothing and left him without anything he could call his own. The captive was thus made a slave, his lack of clothing being evidence of his subjugation. We need only to look at the sculptures of the Assyrians to see the truth of this fact. And in Isaiah xx. 24, we find the following statement: "And the Lord said, like as my servant Isaiah hath walked naked and barefoot three years for a sign, so shall the King of Assyria lead away the Egyptians prisoners and the Ethiopians captives, young and old, naked and barefoot."

The first step then, in tracing the origin of taking off the hat, is the surrender of the clothing among primitive and ancient peoples as a mark of submission. The next step is the uncovering of the body as a mark of reverence. There are all degrees of uncovering, though often only the most valuable parts of the clothing are taken off in the presence of superiors.

Captain Cook tells us that during his stay at Tahiti two men came on board, and, as a sign of respect, took off the greater part of their clothing and put it on Cook and his friend. In Abyssinia, Spencer tells us, it was the custom for inferiors to bare their bodies down to the girdle before superiors. But in the presence of equals only a corner of the tunic was removed so as to bare the shoulder. This baring of the shoulder, especially throughout the Gold Coast, is a custom as common as taking off the hat with us. Uncloaking in Spain is similar in origin. In Africa the men bare their shoulders and doff their caps to superiors, thus joining two customs in one.

It must be remembered that this act of uncovering the body was ceremonial in nature and used to show reverence to a superior. Then came the use of the ceremonial to propitiate the dead. We can see a remnant of this most any time. At funerals and in our graveyards men take off their hats. They still take off their hats on entering churches and before the images of Christ and the Madonna.

In times of chivalry men raised their hats to ladies to show reverence. But this was only superficial in meaning. A knight would ride down a poor peasant woman carrying a large burden and never think of helping her—least of all would he think of taking off his hat to her. However, if he heard of some beautiful damsel of his own class in the slightest danger, imaginary or real, he would go to her and, hat in hand, kneel and dedicate himself to her service

To-day much the same thing occurs. Ordinarily a gay youth forgets to take off his hat to his mother, yet he shows this deference to his "best girl." After all it is only form, and politeness should go deeper than this. However, the form persists, and it is of some historical interest to remember that it is a remnant of the primitive stripping of a captive by which process was expressed the fact that he yielded up all he had. Taking off the hat to a wealthy girl means occasionally not only the yielding up of all you have, but the getting of all she has. Ceremony is often nothing but a hard calculation in regard to personal results, especially where self-aggrandizement is the ultimate aim of the polished individual.

MEDICINES Growing in GARDENS

EVERY vegetable garden is a medicine chest full of remedies that are recognized by physicians as of considerable value in the treatment of various diseases.

Onions, for example, contain sulphur oil, and are recommended for insomnia and as an aid to gastric digestion. They should have a prominent place in the diet of sufferers from rheumatism, for they help to allay the pains.

Turnips and parsnips both have peculiar oily principles which are of value as an aperient and diuretic. It is also claimed that they are good for coughs and hoarseness.

Potatoes contain solanin, which has certain diuretic properties.

The sulphur compound which it contains makes cabbage excellent in cases of scurvy and scrofula

Spinach has iron in organic form, and is useful as a laxative on account of its fine indigestible fibre.

Carrots are useful for correcting derangements of the liver. They are also excellent as a dressing for painful wounds and swellings

The tomato exercises medicinal effects which are not completely explained by the presence of alkaline salts. There is a principle present which when taken in a concentrated state produces salivation and a free stimulation of the liver.

Why YOUTH Is the BEST TIME FOR STUDY

BOSWELL in his "Life of Johnson" quotes the doctor as saying that practically all his knowledge was acquired before his twentieth year. Dr. Johnson's experience is the experience of humanity at large; but just why this should be so has never until lately been thoroughly understood.

Some extremely delicate experiments conducted by Dr. Raguvald Ingebrightsen, of the Rockefeller Institute, make the matter quite plain.

Dr. Ingebrightsen chloroformed a number of young animals—kittens, puppies, baby guinea pigs—and took from them tiny pieces of the membrane which covers the brain and forms its nerve cells. These he immersed in a saline solution. They were then cut into infinitesimally small pieces, pieces about as big as a pin head, and placed in blood serum

The experiment is extremely delicate, for the nerve cells die if more than from twelve to fifteen seconds are allowed to elapse between the moment at which the membrane of the brain is detached from the living organism and the moment at which it is "planted" in blood. Dr. Ingebrightsen, however, succeeded in performing it, and in growing nerves out of these tiny bits of brain membrane, thus proving conclusively that the nerves are actually an outgrowth of the "pia mater," the membrane covering the brain.

He also proved that the nerves do not attain their full growth in a few years any more than does any other organ or muscle of the body. They grow gradually from infancy to maturity, until finally they honeycomb the entire body like railroad tracks in a freight yard.

Now, while the nerves are growing onward to maturity they are gathering impressions, and these impressions, properly correlated, form memory and, what is even more important than memory, association of ideas. The latter faculty is of the utmost importance to everyone; it is, so to speak, the vitalizing principle without which the facts garnered in the storehouse of memory would be a lot of worthless junk. It is only when the nerves of taste, sense, smell, feeling are properly co-ordinated and working in harmony that we can know so simple a thing as that a certain green apple will taste sour and a certain red apple sweet when we see or smell them.

By his wonderful experiments Dr. Ingebrightsen has proved that brain tissue is subject to the same laws of development and growth as every other organ of the body. The man who uses the muscles forming the biceps a good deal becomes strong of arm. Similarly the thinker, using his brain incessantly, becomes brainy and increases the weight of his brain.

It was formerly believed that some mysterious attribute making for vigorous thought was imbedded in the ridges of the brain—the convolutions If these were deep, the owner of the brain was endowed with greater intelligence than the person having shallow ridges. As a matter of fact, these ridges deepen as the nerve cells of the brain grow—that is, the growth of the cells deepens the intervening ridges.

The weight of the normal, average brain is 1,300 grams. Turgenieff, the famous Russian writer, had the heaviest brain on record—2,012 grams. Daniel Webster's brain weighed 1,518 grams. That of Dr. Spitzka who died recently, weighed 1,400 grams, but it was understood that disease had reduced it from its normal weight Bertillon, the famous French detective, slightly ranked Webster, with a weight of 1,525. Walt Whitman, the American poet of nature, forms a curious exception. His brain weighed only 1,282 grams—in other words, less than the average brain.

"HARD" WATER Does Your TEETH Good

PROBABLY it will be news to most people that the condition of the teeth—especially of children—is governed to a large extent by the character of the water habitually drunk. In localities where the water is "hard"—that is containing a high percentage of lime—there is much less demand for the services of dentists than where the main supply of drinking water is "soft."

This might have been suspected, as lime enters largely into the composition of teeth, but it is only recently that the matter has been settled by scientific investigation. The inquiry grew out of observations of the widespread prevalence of "dental caries"—decayed spots in teeth—among school children in England. There, as in this country, more and more attention is being given to the condition of school-children's teeth because of the disastrous effects of bad teeth upon the general health.

Children who appear badly nourished rarely have sound teeth. Bad teeth nearly always cause digestive disturbances, and in the course of time may be responsible for defective eyesight, which so often makes backward pupils of children who are normally bright and capable at their lessons.

The suspicion that the character of the water habitually drunk has much to do with the condition of the teeth was amply justified. The inquiry was very thorough, being conducted in localities supplying water of total hardness, of temporary hardness and of permanent hardness.

Under each of these conditions the children examined numbered eighty. The percentage of those having four or more decayed teeth varied in a most convincing manner according to the hardness of the water supplied in their locality, the remark of the investigator being emphatic that:

"The harder the water the better the teeth."

It was also found that "the lower the infant mortality"—the smaller the percentage of deaths in infancy "the better the teeth."

The connection between a high percentage of cases of decayed teeth and of a high death rate among children was very marked—and too these conditions were associated with soft water areas.

A German authority has written on this susbject:

"Where there is a special demand made as for skeletal growth"—bones and teeth—"the shortage of calcium salts immediately becomes evident, and the saliva becomes defective in alkalinity and caries is liable to occur. There is probably a certain amount of truth in this supposition and it is supported by the fact that a somewhat lower percentage of caries was found in the teeth of the children dwelling in the hard-water districts of Baden and Thuringia than in the children who lived only a few miles away but drank soft water."

How CHARITY and MEDICINE Have Made EUGENICS Necessary

THE main argument against eugenics is that Nature has been running this world for some few million years and probably knows her business. Therefore, the scientist who would say who is and who is not fit to be a parent is an upstart about to trifle with a very dangerous buzz-saw.

Major Leonard Darwin, president of the Eugenics Educational Society of England, recently met this general argument in an interesting way. Major Darwin pointed out that Nature herself is a very enthusiastic eugenist. Wherever she has control of life untrammelled by man's interference she is very particular about the parents she allows to have offspring.

For every creature she has a set of alert and vigilant enemies who make it their business to weed out early in life the slow, the halt, the lame and the blind. Nobody disputes that this is a cruel proceeding, but cruelty is Nature's method. Man in prehistoric times was subject to this same selection of parents by the killing or starving of the unfit.

But man's intelligence has always been in revolt against Nature's cruel methods. Whenever a race of men has succeeded in establishing a civilization it at once began to aid its sick and poor, defending them from Nature and permitting them to multiply This is the reason why adversity builds up nations and wealth makes them decay, and why Rome and Greece fell.

Man's charities and medical science have now advanced so far that the slums are no longer places for killing off the unfit, but breeding grounds for reproducing them. The slums are allowed to breed the weak-minded, diseased and criminal; the charities nourish them and the hospitals keep them alive. Prisons become more and more comfortable, judges and juries more lenient, while Governors pardon a good percentage of the few who are caught in the loose meshes of the law.

That insanity, crime and all forms of unfitness are increasing is not the fault of Nature but the result of interferring with Nature

The eugenist does not advise withholding the helping hand of charity and medicine tothe unfit. He does not advocate abandoning them to Nature's inexorable cruelty. He advises doing everything possible for the comfort and happiness of the unfortunate, but to stop them from passing on the burden of their weakness to future generations

YOU MIGHT TRY--

Saving Time and Labor.

WHEN baking cookies an excellent way to save space in the oven, time in cooking and washing pans is to use a large preserve kettle cover, one with a ring that turns down. If the oven is hot, place it right side up so the ring may be used for a handle. A good sized cover will bake about fourteen cookies at a time.

To Remove Fingermarks.

IT is easy to remove finger marks from woodwork by applying a clean cloth dipped in kerosene Then wipe with a cloth wrung out of hot water.

A Protection for Your Table.

HANDSOME dining tables are often marred by placing dishes containing hot food upon them A good way to avoid this is to make mats of rounds of pasteboard and sew thick white buttons on. By placing the dish on the buttons a circulation of air is allowed under the dish and the table is uninjured

When You Boil Cabbage.

WHEN boiling cabbage try placing a small vessel of vinegar on the back of the stove. The odor of the cabbage will not be so unpleasant if this is done.

Important for Science to Know WHY TOPS SPIN

FEW boys ever stop to think why their tops spin. Neither do the grown-ups who pause to watch the top-spinning which is so universally popular every Spring

Yet engineers, astronomers, physicists and inventors would all like to know more than they do about spinning tops. A great many matters of the utmost importance to the human race depend on finding out all we can about this subject.

The earth on which we live is a top. So are Mars, the North Star, the sun itself, and all the other celestial bodies. It is even suspected that atoms and electrons are spinning tops. The dirigible torpedo is a top, the monorail car is a top, the bullet sped by the gun is a top.

A new form of compass, called the "top" or gyroscopic compass gives direction without being affected by the iron of a battleship or the rolling and pitching of the steamer

All speed machinery has "top" action, which must be reckoned with. Rotary engines, turbines, Diesel engines and all machines which drive fly wheels and propellers have the spinning top behavior

Submarines, aeroplanes and dirigible balloons would be more stable and less dangerous if we could only solve the mystery of a spinning top's action

The gyroscope is a toy top within a tin rim. It is made of a heavy rimmed metal fly wheel mounted in a frame. Friction is reduced to a minimum by the spindle rotating on ball bearings. Thus a great velocity is possible. Engineers and inventors learned from boys to spin this gyroscope top. They are always hoping for a clear understanding of the spin.

The gyroscopic action of the paddle wheels of a steamer exerts a steadying effect upon the vessel at the expense of her steering qualities. The effect of this is to cause the steamer to run away to starboard when acted upon by a cross sea. This makes her turn to starboard when the sea would be expected to send her the other way.

On the other hand, when a paddle steamer is steered to port she heels over to starboard because of the top-spinning action of her paddles. This causes the wheel on the starboard side to become more deeply immersed in the sea than the port one, and the steering is exaggerated.

The top-spinning action of the flywheel of an automobile is interesting, too. The axis of an automobile flywheel runs backward and forward and the flywheel crosswise. If you stand behind an auto you see the wheel revolving as do the hands of a clock. If a man or a woman in a car tries to turn the auto toward the left the flywheel tries to spin its way upward. In consequence a "couple" as it is called, acts on the car and throws the weight of the machine on the back wheels.

When an automobile turns to the right the weight is thrown on the front wheels because of this top-spinning action of the flywheel Many accidents to motor cars are due to interference with this top-spinning action when turning a corner sharply or at great speed.

Turning a motor boat, a ship's head and an aeroplane, as well as the rolling and pitching of great vessels, all bring about unlooked-for catastrophes by virtue of this mysterious top-spinning devilishness.

SEEING STARS in Broad DAYLIGHT

TO SEE celestial objects in broad daylight was no easy matter until Arthur Prahl, a Milwaukee scientist, made certain observations which he has recently announced. The instruments used—telescopes like field glasses—had to be focused by guesswork. They had to "sweep up" the azure skies.

The first stars found by daylight with these glasses were Rigel and its companion. Both of these stars were seen easily as bluish white and without any "diffraction" rings of light.

Eta of Orion was found next, and it presented a more beautiful appearance than at night. It looked like a real sharp dot.

The star Zela was seen as double. Its third star of the tenth magnitude is invisible by daylight.

Signa was triple, Iota was observed to be triple, and the four stars of the Trapezium came out clearly with no trace of a nebula. Mr. Prahl says it was the queerest of sensation to see the familiar stars of the night free from the "filmy veils" which offer such complex and wonderful structures in the nocturnal sky.

Finally, he turned his day telescope on Venus, and the disc appeared beautifully sharp, with no trace of the marking seen at night.

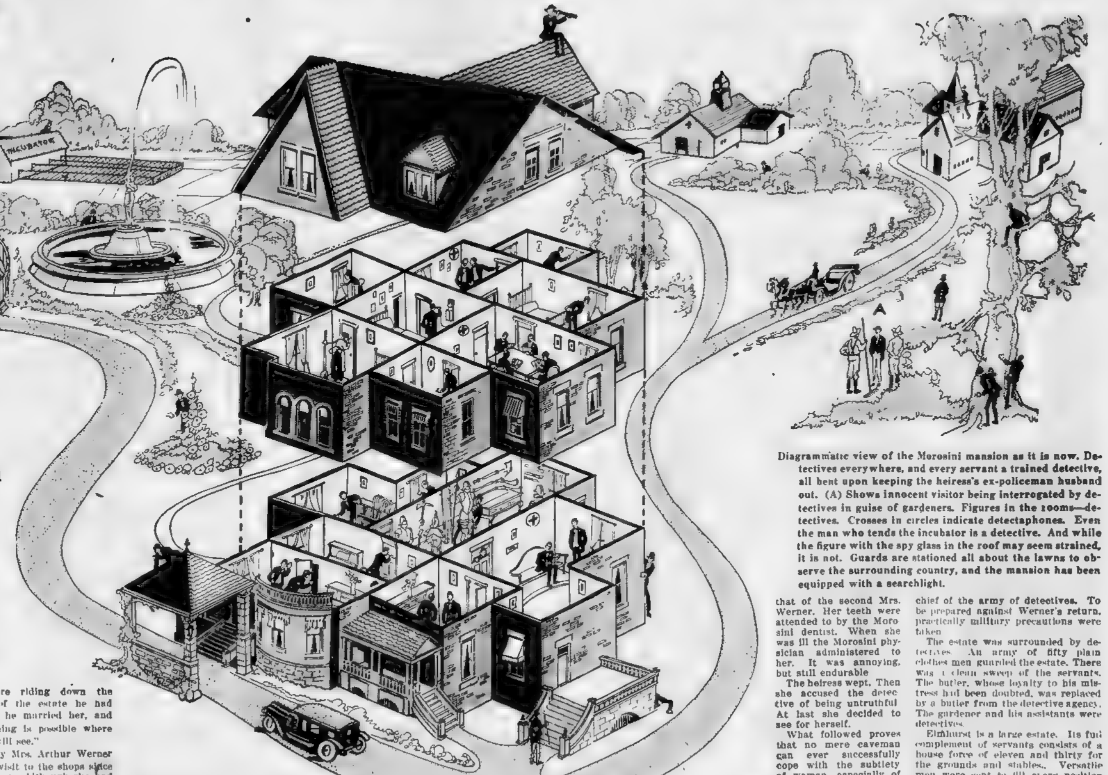
How Heiress Morosini Tried To Tame Her "Cave Man" Husband

Werner, the ex-Policeman, in the Soldierly Equestrian Attitude that Won Heiress Morosini's Heart.

And the Uncommon Devices She Is Using to Keep Him Away from Her When the Unique Experiment Failed



Diagrammatic view of the Morosini mansion as it is now. Detectives everywhere, and every servant a trained detective, all bent upon keeping the heiress's ex-policeman husband out. (A) Shows innocent visitor being interrogated by detectives in guise of gardeners. Figures in the rooms—detectives. Crosses in circles indicate detectaphones. Even the man who tends the incubator is a detective. And while the figure with the spy glass in the roof may seem strained, it is not. Guards are stationed all about the lawns to observe the surrounding country, and the mansion has been equipped with a searchlight.

MRS. GIULIA MOROSINI-WERNER, of New York, has declared her half-million-dollar estate in a state of siege, has equipped her mansion with a searchlight that at night sweeps the surrounding country like a battleship, and with all the chores being done by a corps of detectives, is sitting back waiting for the worst.

The worst she is awaiting is to have her husband—ex-Policeman Arthur W. Werner—outwit the garrison and come back.

Mrs. Morosini-Werner is the favorite daughter of the late Giovanni Morosini, the Italian banker who linked his fortunes with Jay Gould and accumulated upwards of seven million dollars by doing so. When he died he left Miss Giulia five millions of the seven.

The Morosini estate, known as "Elmhurst," is located at Riverdale-on-the-Hudson, just below the northernmost limits of New York City, and is one of the show-places of the country. Its collection of armor and curios has been envied by connoisseurs from every corner of the world. The value of the precious stones contained in the treasures has been estimated at over $400,000.

Miss Giulia was educated in a convent. One of her sisters had eloped with a coachman; one of her brothers had married Mary Caroline Washington Bond, a great-great-granddaugter of a relative of George Washington—a marriage which was strongly opposed by the Italian banker because the bride was a Protestant. The old man determined that Giulia shouldn't marry at all. He kept the most vigorous watch of all her movements, personally attending her on every possible occasion. He gave her everything in the world but freedom to meet the opposite sex.

Miss Giulia was a lover of horses and dresses. She had a stable of blue-blooded animals and spent $200,000 a year on clothes.

Enter now Mounted Policeman Arthur W. Werner, whose rounds took in the Riverdale estate.

Mounted on his beautiful horse, "Mr. Jones," the giant policeman, expert horseman as he was, made a vivid impression on the carefully nurtured man-starved heiress, and frequently put Mr. Jones through his paces for her edification.

Quite suddenly Werner resigned from the police force and was appointed superintendent of Elmhurst by Mr. Morosini at an annual salary of $10,000. Needless to say, the old banker had no suspicion at the time that there was any danger of the ex-policeman awakening the slumbering love of his favorite daughter. Besides, Werner already had a wife!

The father died. The bulk of his estate was left to his favorite daughter. Very soon after the period of mourning was over, to the great astonishment of society, Miss Morosini appeared in public with Arthur Werner, the ex-policeman, as her escort. On January 12, 1911, they were married.

And now begins the real story.

"Yes; he is very handsome and very strong; but, my dear, how will you ever tame him?"

The beautiful brunette, the bride of a week, looked tenderly after the giant-like figure riding down the green slopes of the estate he had married when he married her, and said: "Everything is possible where love is. You will see."

The next day Mrs. Arthur Werner paid her first visit to the shops since her wedding day. Although she had changed her name from that of Giulia Morosini, the change of name made no difference in the credit of the woman to whom her father, the old banker and follower of Garibaldi, had left five million dollars.

"Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast," she whispered with the ecstatic smile of one for whom the honeymoon is shining.

True, this giant-like man she had married was taller than most men—six feet two inches in height and with a corresponding girth and weight. True, he had made love in a roar rather than a voice. Admittedly he demanded whatever he wanted. He did not ask. He didn't even remember to say "Thank you" for services performed and favors rendered.

But despite these trifles she had married what every woman—well, nearly every one—wanted, a splendid creature whom J. M. Barrie characterized as "a masterful man." Every woman—nearly every woman, she did not wish to be different—wants a master. In her heart every feminine being seeks a cave man. Well, she had him. Now, what should she do with him? The words of her friend recurred to her. "Tame him?" Certainly she would and could. Nothing is impossible to a bride.

The bride reached the exclusive department store; she went straight to the music department. "Show me some music boxes," she said. "I've read of them. Some made especially for gentlemen." She blushed.

A cigar box that played an aria from "Il Trovatore" every time you opened it? Yes, the very thing. Were there not other articles of like nature? A hair brush contained an odd device that set a grand opera duet in motion whenever it was used. The bride was charmed.

A clothes brush of the same sort? They had none in stock, but they would order one. Yes, it should be ready within ten days. So it happened that while the honeymoon still shone every room in the mansion was equipped with music. Like any hero of a melodrama, her bridegroom's entrance into a room was accompanied by music. Fondly she watched and waited for results. Had they not established a music cure at Ward's Island for the insane? Then without doubt the influence of sweet sounds would affect for the better the too strong personality for her "cave man."

She accompanied her giant to the shops of the best tailors. When he thought they had "bought enough duds," she replied: "Dearest, we have just begun." To Elmhurst by every express came boxes containing fine raiment for the ex-policeman and ex-superintendent of the estate, who had evolved into the state of husband of one of the richest young women in New York. He counted his suits until after the number reached fifty. Then he gave it up. He had the same number of suits of silk underwear. His pajamas were in number like the sands of the sea, and in colors as magnificent as the rainbow.

Pictures? Every one knows that they develop the taste and encourage the intellectual life. The Morosini home was crowded with works of art. The bride led her lord into the gallery filled with old Italian masters.

Books? The library at Elmhurst overflowed with the classics. She tried reading to him from the poets. In the midst of a translation of Dante's "Inferno" he got up, yawned, open-faced, and tramped out of the room. His wife peered out of the curtains of Italian silk, saw him walk up and down the piazza, gazing at the sky.

"Love of nature is refining." So she comforted herself. "We must take up the study of astronomy together."

It was a bit disconcerting to hear a whistle, to see her husband go to the barn where, following him in her thousand-dollar evening gown and in diamond-buckled slippers that were ruined by the dew, she found him playing poker with a policeman. She ran sobbing back to the house. That night they had their first quarrel.

"Drop your policemen friends," said the five-million-dollar heiress.

But he responded in cave language.

As good wives do, Mrs. Werner forgave him and tried to forget.

"He is so lonesome, poor dear," she reflected. "I will provide him society of a more elevating type."

Sad to state, they were not a success.

But what was more dispiriting was the fact that her husband manifested more and more of a disposition to take his gallops across the hills overlooking the Hudson alone.

She visited the Burns Detective Agency and asked that a man be detailed to learn the secret of her husband's solitary rides. She engaged him as an employee on the estate. Her husband disliked him and threatened to discharge him.

"I think you will like him when you know him," was her suave reply. "Why don't you get acquainted with him, dear. Play poker with him."

The Burns man lost so frequently and good-naturedly to Werner that he was allowed to remain. From toleration Werner's feeling grew to liking. He even asked the amiable poker player to accompany him on his rides. They took him, it is alleged, to a pleasant house at New Rochelle. Their hostess on these calls was Miss Alice Redding, who had been Arthur Werner's wife while he was a mounted policeman.

The first Mrs. Werner, the detectives told the second Mrs. Werner, had a stable, and in that stable was a saddle horse. She owned a touring car, and kept three servants. She entertained at smart parties. She went frequently to the theatres. She wore handsome gowns. She made a point of riding past the Elmhurst estate now and then, and on these occasions wore a riding habit the same color and style as that of the second Mrs. Werner. Her teeth were attended to by the Morosini dentist. When she was ill the Morosini physician administered to her. It was annoying, but still endurable.

The heiress wept. Then she accused the detective of being untruthful. At last she decided to see for herself.

What followed proves that no mere caveman can ever successfully cope with the subtlety of woman, especially of an heiress with centuries of education in the arts at her command. Mrs. Werner proved her possession of initiative. Also of subtlety. Also of tact and unbelievable self-control. She vanished for a few days from Elmhurst. She had gone to New Rochelle disguised as a cook to verify for herself some of what she had been told. Close upon that visit Mrs. Werner visited her lawyers in New York. Returning from that all-day conference she wrote her husband a note telling him she knew the secrets of the visits to New Rochelle. "I have engaged lawyers to bring suit to annul our marriage, on the ground that it was never legal. You may go back to the wife from whom it now seems you were never really divorced," she said.

Thereupon it was proven that none of her three years' education of the caveman had been successful. Not even had he learned the rudiment that one must never make a scene.

He called all the servants together. He sent for his wife.

"Did you write this note?" he said, waving it in her face.

"Yes," she answered.

That was a painful scene.

Terrified, the heiress prepared her fortress for a state of siege.

"Drop the portcullis!" she would have cried in another time and place. In this age and at Elmhurst she telephoned for an army of detectives.

The detective who had discovered the situation at New Rochelle was rewarded by being placed in charge of the estate. Not only was he made overseer, but commander-in-chief of the army of detectives. To be prepared against Werner's return, practically military precautions were taken.

The estate was surrounded by detectives. An army of fifty plain clothes men guarded the estate. There was a clean sweep of the servants. The butler, whose loyalty to his mistress had been doubted, was replaced by a butler from the detective agency. The gardener and his assistants were detectives.

Elmhurst is a large estate. Its full complement of servants consists of a house force of eleven and thirty for the grounds and stables. Versatile men were sent to fill every position and have capably filled them all. W. J. Burns has seen the advisability of having his men trained in such occupations to maintain their state of incognito.

The only way to keep it up and allay the fears of the heiress wife was to have the work done by detectives. For its thorough maintenance it was even necessary to have a detective in charge of the chicken incubator and another to milk the cows.

Dictographs were placed in all the rooms to record the words of fleeing servants and suspicious visitors.

On the night when Werner returned to secure his princely wardrobe and other personal effects a big searchlight flashed full in his face, nearly blinding him. His former poker partner challenged him with "Who goes there?" A half dozen determined-looking men stood at the back of their commander-in-chief. It was evident from their casual placing of their hands upon their pockets that they were armed.

In view of all this and the newly installed searchlight that followed him up the green terrace and to the side door of the red brick mansion, the ex-policeman's manners were most commendable. They almost conformed to his wife's high standards. He neither stormed nor bullied as he made his way to his own apartments and began his packing. The packing done, he walked quietly out, departing from the house that should know him no more, without a sound. He was really dignified.

The heiress had triumphed. She had at last tamed her caveman.

Our Drinks 'Memory' Cocktails

A RECENT investigation that has been made by one of the large coffee growers of Porto Rico into the taste of coffee after its preparation for breakfast has brought to light a number of curious facts about taste.

Foremost among these is the knowledge that the actual beverage being drunk is seldom being tasted. Memory plays so large a share in taste that, unless our attention is called to the drink that is before us, we are generally unconscious of its character.

Thus, for example, if a man is firmly convinced that his wife invariably makes good coffee, he will seldom question the tastefulness of his cup at breakfast. On the other hand, if he is drinking coffee made by some one else, he compares that, not with the coffee made by his wife, but the general idealized conception he has formed of his wife's brewing.

In order to taste a beverage that is being drunk it is necessary for the mind suddenly to stimulate the organs of sensation of taste, and this very mental stimulation brings the forces of memory to bear on the situation.

If the drink be something entirely new, comparisons are immediately instituted between the drink itself and the memory of the former drinks; though comparison with the former drinks themselves is impossible. So closely, indeed, are our ideas interlinked that memories of former delectable nectars may be keenly recalled on account of special occasions of rejoicing coupled with them.

It is for this reason that medicine usually tastes so nasty, not because all medicine is necessarily bad-tasting, but because even the least objectionable recalls to the mind some other mixture nauseous in the extreme.

What we taste when we drink, therefore, is, as a matter of fact, only a "memory" cocktail.

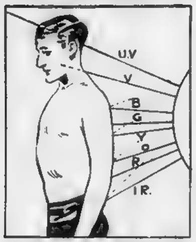
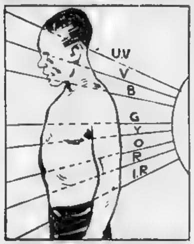
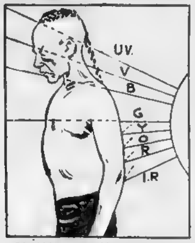
Tracing the Scourge of Cancer Down to Light Starvation



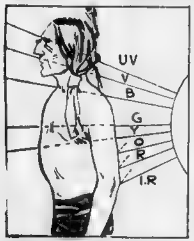
The White Turns Back All Light Rays Except the Ultra-Violet and the Violet. He Is Most Susceptible to Cancer.



The Skin of the Negro Absorbs Every Ray. This Is What Makes Him Look Black. He Is Almost Immune from Cancer.



The Chinaman and Yellow Man Throw Back the Yellow, Orange and Red Rays. Next to the White in Susceptibility to Cancer.



The Red Man Turns Back the Red and Orange Rays Only, Absorbing All the Others. He Is Little Subject to Cancer.

THAT cancer is caused by sunlight starvation is the novel suggestion advanced by Dr. Thomas S. Blair, the well-known physician and editor of Philadelphia.

His theory in brief is that sunlight is essential to human tissues, but that the white skin of civilized people repels most of its beneficial rays and modern clothing prevents the others from reaching the deep tissues of the human body. As he puts it, cancer is a disease "caused by the non-absorption by the tissues of the light physiologically demanded by them, the light-starvation resulting in normal tissues and cells taking on a depraved growth."

There is much in cancer research which seems to support this theory. The authorities seem to be unanimous on the proposition that among primitive peoples whose skin is darker than ours cancer is rarer Thus the natives of New Guinea, Australia, the Malay Islands, Sierra Leone, Natal and Colon are all remarkably free from cancer according to these investigators, except where they have adopted civilized ways and wear modern clothes.

The contention is made that cancer is less prevalent among the black, red and yellow races simply because their tissues and cells are nourished by beneficial sunrays which our white skins repel. We absorb only the ultra-violet rays, and possibly some of the violet, whereas the skin of the negro, yellow and red races absorbs the violet, indigo and blue rays as well—the negro, indeed, reflecting back no rays at all.

Dr Blair's theory is particularly interesting in view of the fact that he is a victim of cancer himself. He contracted the disease while engaged in X-ray work. He was one of the first to experiment with Roentgen rays and sustained severe burns in the course of his research. Although he ceased this work six years ago, his hands are still marked by five small but very black tumors—epithelial "X-ray" warts.

At times a pain wholly out of proportion to the insignificant warts which seem to be responsible for it extends all the way to the shoulder, but this pain invariably ceases when the arm and hand are bared and exposed to the full blaze of the sun.

It was this phenomenon which suggested to the physician that there might be some relation between cancer and sunlight, an idea which became the more plausible when taken in connection with the fact that the most efficacious treatment thus far discovered for cancer has been the use of the X ray and radium emanations. Was it not possible that the reason these agents have proven effective was because they penetrated the skin and thus supplied to the deeper tissues a substitute for the light-food for which the tissues and the cells had been starving?

Research along these lines brought to light considerable data which tended to confirm the view

It appeared that cancer is rare among the natives of New Guinea and Australia, and that the Melanesians rarely acquire it until after adopting the white man's life The same was found to be the case with the natives of Yucatan, Colon and Natal. In Sierra Leone it was found that while the natives who adopted white men's ways suffered from cancer, those who lived among the whites but did not adopt their ways were still relatively free from it.

More significant still were the observations of Professor Daniel Berthelot, of France. According to this scientist, the skin of the modern human race differs much from that of our ancestors, a change marked by great whiteness.

While the bodies of the more primitive races absorb the violet end of the spectrum to a greatly increased degree, they also absorb most of the other rays of the spectrum as well, the primitive negro skin reflecting back no color at all.

Professor Berthelot also pointed out that the skin of the red races absorbs all but the red and orange rays, and the yellow races absorb all but the red, orange and yellow, while our white skins absorb none but the ultra-violet and possibly a little of the violet reflecting back the whole visible spectrum.

If our skin gets much whiter, he concludes, we won't absorb even the ultra-violet rays, and then, to quote Dr. Blair, "the race may find itself frightfully decimated by an almost universal scourge of cancer."

Taking these facts in connection with the results which have been obtained with X-rays and radium in the treatment of cancer, Dr. Blair points out that the X-ray with an excess of short-length emanations and no long ones, brings its own train of trouble, while the available, or likely to be available, supply of radium allows but a mere glimmer of light where floods of it are needed.

"To our view," he remarks, "these agents are of value in cases where the light-starvation has been so long continued that a sudden influx of deeply penetrating rays may be viewed in the light of an emergency remedy, occupying a place akin to the oxygen tank when fresh air is hardly strong enough to tide the subject over But the oxygen tank cannot take the place of fresh air, neither can radium and the X-ray the place of sunlight."

It is a fact that the American negro is quite subject to cancer. This is due to the fact that clothing is so worn and designed as to insulate nearly the whole surface of the body from the light rays of the sun

"Man is the only animal that does that sort of thing," Dr. Blair declares, "and, aside from rats and burrowing animals in a wild state and domestic animals kept away from the sun to an inordinate degree, man is almost alone in suffering from the ravages of cancer.

"Man was by his Creator designed to thrive in the midst of the forces of nature. The almost instant craving for food and drink makes it imperative that these cravings be satisfied. We all know how lack of vital air is productive of tuberculosis and other diseases. Why should not the lack of sunshine be productive of an equally definite pathology?"

Going out into the sun in white sun-reflecting garments and with the head covered will not satisfy the physiological requirements of the body, according to Dr. Blair. It is necessary to expose the whole surface of the body to the sunshine, as the old Greeks used to do. "There is no history of much cancer among them," he remarks, "despite their elaborate civilization.

"Assuredly, it is not a fantastic view that nature intended the tissues to absorb sunshine; nor is it impossible at all that such baths of sunshine are a sort of food to the tissues. Why should man be an exception among the other animals?

"We insulate ourselves against the forces of nature at our peril. Why should not the deep tissues of an animal demand sunshine no less than does plant life? Is not sunshine actually a tropic or metabolic food or stimulent to the plant? We have no reason to believe that the animal, though probably to a lesser degree, is not dependent upon the same influence."

Scientists have proven that the pigment in the skin is necessary to protect us against light, a proposition which would seem to be at variance with this new theory. The apparent discrepancy is cleared away, however, by Dr. Blair's explanation.

"Pigment protects against an excess of the lethal undiluted ultra-violet rays of the tropical sun," he declares. "The white man tries to avoid these rays by keeping his skin white, and he is proceeding upon a wrong application of the laws of physics.

"He should darken his skin by discreet and regulated exposure, so that the ultra-violet rays are diluted with other longer-length rays, thus escaping much of the tropical dangers. Wearing white clothing simply accentuates the dangers of the ultra-violet rays, for they penetrate such clothing, while the longer-length rays do not."

It also has been contended by a well-known scientist, Dr. Watkins-Pitchford, that sunlight actually causes cancer.

Referring to that authority's contention, Dr Blair said:

"Dr. Watkins-Pitchford wrote his monograph to prove that strong sunlight caused a reduction of resistance to the unknown cause or causes of cancer His deductions, as based upon white-skinned people in white clothing, were probably correct, and they tend, in a negative way, to confirm our view. Incidentally, it may be remarked that, in 1911, in our own registration area, negro death rate from all kinds of cancers was 67 while the white death rate was 75."

How far the new theory may prove helpful in the fight against cancer may be doubtful, but Dr. Blair holds out considerable hope

"We may talk about cures for cancer," he declares, "until we are weary of the subject, and, until the cause is discovered, it is foolish to talk about cure in any scientific way.

"In trying out every possible agency for the treatment of cancer we tumbled upon the X-ray and radium, although no one pretends to tell why they should be effective. But the fact remains that, despite their limitations, these agents do have more of a specific influence upon cancer than do any other things thus far investigated.

"There is no cure unless it bears some relationship to the cause. The X-ray has caused, by over-exposure, epithelial growths upon the hands of many X-ray operators, and a moderate exposure to the X-ray has cured some cancers. What is the causal relationship? What is the relationship to prevention and cure?

"And why should cancer be a mystery? Assuredly, some violation of nature's laws is responsible for the menace that is increasingly confronting us. If we are right, if sunshine is a tissue food, if light-starvation is pathological, if such pathology causes the disease known as cancer, then assuredly there is no cure for cancer in any other sense than there is a cure for tuberculosis.

"If forced feeding and bathing the lungs in vital air give nature a chance to cure tuberculosis, may not bathing the whole bared body in sunshine have a useful place? May it not be nature's aid in curing something?

"Would sunshine cure advanced cancer? No. But it might prevent a vast deal of it. If reasonably employed, radium and the X-ray plus sunshine may give nature the vital stimulus necessary to cure some cases, but not all."

That sunshine is at least a factor in the cancer problem would seem to follow from Dr. Blair's presentation of the evidence.

Repairing Broken Bones with Steel Bolts and Screws Just Like Broken Furniture

IN the United States and every other country there are countless thousands of persons going through life crippled, simply because a fractured bone has been badly set.

Whenever there is a considerable displacement of the broken bones, the old-fashioned splint treatment is useless to restore the proper shape of the limb and its functions

Dr. Ernest W Hey Groves, professor in the Royal College of Surgeons of England, has perfected a system of mending bad fractures by means of screws passed through the bones with plates or nuts at the ends to hold the screws in position and hasten union of the bone by pressing the fragments together

"The old-fashioned method of setting a broken limb by splints or plaster goes back to prehistoric times," says Professor Groves. "It is almost everything that is bad It does nothing to reduce the deformity, it allows enough movement between the fragments to cause great callus excess, it keeps the patient in bed or inactive for the longest possible time, it does everything that can be done to make the muscles waste, the tendons adhere to their sheaths and the joints to become fixed. And it conceals the prospect of all those evil results beneath the covering of elegant bandaging, so that they are not apparent until too late for remedy.

"One good feature the method has, which, unfortunately, with many outweighs all its evils It is easy for both patient and practitioner at the time. Perhaps one-half hour is given to fixing the arm on any angular splint or to putting the leg into plaster, and then nothing more has to be done for a month or two, except for the patient to enjoy his convalescence and the surgeon to come and chat to him about the weather from time to time Hence it is that the method which goes back to the Pharaohs seems likely to flourish for many a generation to come, so long, in fact, as 'watchful waiting' is the most popular motto of the day

"There may be some who think my words a gross exaggeration, for they say that many a case has done well by the splint and plaster treatment This is quite true, and it is this that makes the whole difficulty. If every case treated by a splint became maimed or lame for life no argument would be needed to condemn the method Possibly the majority of patients treated by it got a finally good result. But this good result is not because of the treatment, but rather in spite of it—that is to say, splint treatment is not treatment at all, except in a negative sense of the word It is treatment only in the sense that the bed is treatment for enteric fever Every broken bone, the fragments of which are not much displaced, will, if protected from further injury, heal, but when the fragments are displaced, the splint or plaster will do nothing to restore the proper form to the bone, and they also increase the functional loss due to adhesion of muscles and joints.

"The only fractures that do well with the splint treatment are those in which the displacement of the fragments is trivial, and in such cases prolonged splinting is quite unnecessary, except in the form of a movable splint, only to be used during exercise and taken off when in bed and for massage."

Professor Groves pointed out that all methods of healing bones by screws and bolts should provide for holding the connecting link firmly in the original position.

"No metal nail or screw driven into a bone," he said, "can remain tightly in position and resist a displacing force for very long unless it holds the bone by a broad flange. The most simple way of providing this broad grip is by using a bolt which transfixes the bone and is secured by a nut and washer on the opposite side.

"Such a device has for a long time been advocated by Professor Delage, of Brussels, who has designed a very useful set of appliances for carrying it out, and has published many cases illustrating its use. No doubt this method is exceedingly efficient, particularly in the fixation of fragments at the articular ends of the long bones and in certain very oblique fractures of their shafts. But its efficiency can be still more increased and its scope extended if the transfixing bolts be used to fix metal plates on opposite sides of the bone. It will be convenient to describe the technique I have adopted, first for fractures of the articular ends, and secondly for fractures of the shaft.

"It is in the elbow, knee and ankle that these fractures are most common and the most difficult to treat. There are two main things to be accomplished—first, the fixing of the broken fragments together, and then the firm attachment of the mended articular end to the shaft of the bone. My illustrations will give a good idea of the method.

"In the case of the knee and the elbow the joint cavity must be opened and the fragments reduced so exactly to their relative positions that the joint surface is perfectly restored. In this position they are held and transfixed by a long drill from side to side, and into the hole so made is passed a long bolt which is 3-32-inch to ¼-inch thick, according to the size of the bone. The head of the bolt carries one plate and another plate is passed over its opposite end and secured tightly by a nut when the projecting end of the bolt is cut off.

"It is important that the bolt should be made of soft iron so as to make this latter proceeding easy. Then the other ends of the plate are bolted to the shaft of the bone after an accurate reduction of this part of the fracture. The plates are only one-sixteenth inch thick and being of soft iron they become bent to fit the contour of the bone. The application of the second bolt so as to pass through the holes ready made for it in the plates must be done by means of a special drill guide.

"In the elbow this operation is somewhat difficult because of the close neighborhood of the ulnar and musculospiral nerves, and because there is only one spot where the articular end of the humerus can be transfixed without entering the coronoid or olecranon fossae (depressions in the bone that must be kept free). In the ends of the femur and tibia which form the knee joint the method is easy because there are very large surfaces for transfixion, and these surfaces are uncovered by any important structures.

"In bad cases of fractures close to the ankle joint this method is of the greatest utility. It is absolutely essential that the processes of the tibia and the fibula (long leg bones) should not only be accurately replaced, but that they should be so firmly fixed that they will not yield when the pressure of the body weight is upon them. I saw the ankle of a laboring man who was treated by one of the most up-to-date methods of non-operative methods, viz., that of immediate massage with early movements.

"It will be seen that although the end of the fibula (small leg bone) has united very firmly at the shaft, the talus has yielded before the body weight and the socket of the ankle joint become permanently deformed, so that unless it can be corrected the patient has an extreme talipes valgus (splay foot) which will incapacitate him from ordinary work for the rest of his life.

"It is in the bones of the leg that this method is of the most value, because in this situation we have to aim at a union which is not only firm enough to withstand great muscular strain, but one which is strong enough to bear the weight of the body before the occurrence of full bony union.

"I use plates of soft steel, nickel-plated, which vary in length from two to four and one-half inches, in thickness from one thirty-second to one-eighth inch, and width from five-sixteenths to one-half inch. Sometimes, especially in the case of a thigh bone a [illegible] plate is more convenient, but usually a curved plate not only lies more snugly, but gives much greater strength. In some cases in the humerus (elbow bone) at the lower end of the femur (thigh bone) and the lower end of the shin bone it is most convenient to make two incisions, one on each side of the limb, but elsewhere the whole operation is done through a single incision which must be of ample length."

“The cornea of the pig's eye was removed and inserted in the place of the useless and opaque layer of the baby's eye. The delicate operation of bandaging then followed. Six days afterward the baby was able to see.”

How a Blind Baby Was Made to See Through the Eye of a Pig

BY grafting operations, surgical science is aiming to repair every physical defect of the human body. The grafts are commonly taken from animals, but in some cases portions of a dead human body, or some part of an injured human organ, may be used to advantage.

Astonishing progress has been made within a few years in this line of surgical science. The latest achievement is the grafting of the cornea of a pig's eye in place of the injured cornea of a human eye.

The patient war David Kane, the nine-months-old child of Herman Kane, of Gettysburg, Pa. He had been blind from birth as a result of an infection which had caused the cornea, or transparent part of the eye, to thicken and become opaque. An operation was performed on the right eye, by which the outer portion of the thickened cornea was removed. This produced a partial restoration of sight. The left eye could not be dealt with in this manner and remained hopelessly blind.

Dr. Floyd B. Whitham, a young surgeon of the Baltimore Eye, Ear and Nose Hospital, undertook to perform a novel operation on little David Kane to restore the sight of the left eye.

Dr. Whitman decided to use a pig's eye in the operation on David Kane. The pig, in the structure of many of its tissues and organs, is said to bear a closer resemblance to a human being than any other animal This is said to be true especially of the pig's eye. The little boy is in fact to-day able to see with the pig's cornea, and great hopes are felt that the success will be permanent.

The cornea—like the other parts of tough, globular tissue containing the machinery of vision—is composed of some sixty distinct layers of fibre, superimposed and held together by a cement-like substance. These layers are merged into the layers of the sclerotic coat—the larger part of the eyeball's covering, a tough, opaque membrane which completes the globular form back to where the optic nerve enters the brain and merges into the nerve-membrane coating the inner surface of the globe-tissue, which is called the retina.

Underlying the sclerotic coat and the cornea as far forward as the elastic curtain containing the pupil and called the iris, is a network of muscular tissue containing arteries, veins and nerves. The main portion of the eyeball from the retina forward is filled with vitreous humor—a transparent, jelly-like substance which sustains its form, and through which the light entering through the pupil is filtered upon the retina.

Resting upon the mass of vitreous humor back of the iris—like a thin-edged, thick-in-the-middle cork in a bottle—is the transparent, hard, cartilaginous structure, the crystalline lens—in shape like any artificial lens with two convex surfaces. Between the outer surface of the lens and the apex of the cornea is a chamber filled with water—aqueous humor—in which the iris with its pupil-centre floats. A thickening or opacity of the cornea means that light is shut out from the eye.

The pig was first operated upon. He was rendered thoroughly aseptic and then placed under ether. The cornea of his eye was removed with a circular trephine by the surgeon and placed in a normal salt solution, ready for use when the human patient should be ready. The pig was allowed to die under the anesthetic.

The surgeon then proceeded with the operation on the child. The entire corneal portion of the patient's eyeball was exposed by clamps which held back the lids. Then, with the special Von Hippel instrument, a delicate, revolving knife, the surgeon made a circular incision several layers deep a little to the front of where the cornea joins the sclerotic coat. These layers were entirely dead. Without much difficulty they were peeled off, much as one would peel off the skin of an onion.

The circular incision was deepened, and slowly, with infinite care, more layers of the seared, horny substance of the cornea were peeled and cut away. By the time that half the thickness of the cornea had been removed it became evident that quite a number of the innermost layers were uninjured What remained of the tissue was now transparent; underlying nerves and blood vessels came into view, and at the apex the darkened pupil of the eye was plainly visible. Another very delicate circular incision, the careful dissection of another thin set of layers, and the patient was prepared for the latter half of the operation—still delicate, but requiring much less time.

The pig's cornea, precisely measured, had been dissected down to its innermost layers. Deftly the surgeon lifted it with his forceps and placed it, like a tiny cup bottom upward, upon the eye prepared to receive it. Gentle pressure glued the two wounded surfaces to each other Only a thin, almost imperceptible circle of vertical cleavage showed that there had been any operation on the baby's eye, but at the apex of the cornea the pupil and the iris were now clearly visible. Granting a successful healing process, the patient would soon have as good an eye as before the accident in which he was blinded

The clamps were removed, the eyelids pressed closely down and bandaged.

The bandages were removed on the sixth day, and the eye was tested to find if the operation had been successful Admitting a little light, one of the doctors at the cotside held up a doll before the youngster. As his mother bent anxiously over him, he blinked uncertainly a moment or two, then reached up both hands after the doll

Dr. Kane placed his hand over the right eye, in which there was known to be some sight, but still the little fellow kept reaching after the toy. Then the room was darkened and a candle was moved slowly before the baby's face. His left eye followed it intelligently. It was proved that sight had been restored to the blind eye. It will be more than a month before the operation can be considered a permanent success.

This is only one of many remarkable grafting operations and experiments that have been performed in recent years.

Dr. Alexis Carrel, the most original surgical expert of the Rockefeller Institute, New York, has grafted the leg of one dog upon another and the surgeons have watched the living animal skipping about on his dead friend's leg. He has transferred the kidneys of one cat to another, and has repeated the operation on many pairs of cats. He has grafted a vein in place of a worn-out artery. He has preserved arteries in cold storage and many days later has successfully planted them in a living animal.

He has proved that the diseased arteries and vital organs of a sick man can be replaced by the arteries and organs of other men and animals.

He has perfected the method of grafting nerves and arteries in co-operation with Dr. C. C. Guthrie

Dr. Carrel performed another series of kidney plantation experiments. He took one kidney from a dog and put it back again, and from other dogs he took two kidneys and replanted them.

In one experiment he removed the left kidney of a dog and put it into a jar of Locke's solution at the temperature of the laboratory. Afterward the kidney was replaced in the abdominal cavity. The circulation was re-established after suture of the vessels, and the ends of the ureter united. The animal made an uneventful recovery. Fifteen days afterward the right kidney, which had not yet been experimented upon, was extirpated. Six months later the animal was in perfect condition, showing it is living by means of the kidney that was once out of its body.

"This observation," says Dr. Carrel, "demonstrates definitely that an animal can live in normal condition after both kidneys have been extirpated and one replaced."

Dr. Carrel has transplanted arteries from one animal to another and has transplanted parts of veins in place of arteries. This is an operation likely to be very useful to man, since many veins can be dispensed with, while the large arteries are essential to life. Pieces of peritoneum may also be used to repair gaps that have been cut in arteries. Cancers and tumors frequently form round an artery. They could not be removed formerly, because to do so would destroy the artery and cause death, but if a gap in the artery can be replaced, operation becomes possible

Perhaps the most astonishing discovery made by Dr. Carrel during these experiments was that a section of artery may be preserved in a refrigerator for as long a period as thirty-five days and then made to grow in a healthy man or animal. This indicates that when a man dies he does not die completely, but merely that one or more vital organs die.

Mrs. Blake's Tin Horn “Speaking Tube” to the “Spirit World”

THE American Society for Psychical Research has just completed an investigation of what has recently been commented upon extensively on both sides of the ocean as "Mrs. Blake's tin horn speaking tube from the spirit world." The "manifestations" of this extraordinary instrument have been so widely circulated and have received so much attent'on from the credulous that the observations of the investigators are interesting—even if their conclusions do seem to be far away from what careful and unsuperstitious psychologists assert to be the real explanation.

Briefly, Mrs. Blake's method of "communicating with the departed" is to use a double-ended trumpet—somewhat like two ordinary horns united at the bell ends. Mrs. Blake holds one of these trumpets to her ear and the person communicating with the "spirits" holds the other end to his ear Voices are then supposed to be heard within the trumpet and these voices communicate messages from the dead.

The investigators reject the possibility of the voices being ventriloquial noises made by Mrs. Blake, on the ground that they are heard equally well when the medium holds the tube in her hand.

Dr. James H. Hyslop, editor and chief expert for the society, concludes his report with the statement that there is neither proof for the voices' being independent nor for Mrs. Blake producing them.

A Photograph from the American Journal of Psychical Research Showing Mrs. Blake in Action with Her Horn.

Before reading the interesting accounts of the investigators, it may be well to know how psychologists explain the case of Mrs. Blake. Every one has had, no doubt, the experience of thinking that he has heard his name called when there was no one around to do the calling. And every one has held a shell to his ear to listen to the roaring. The voices in Mrs. Blake's trumpet, say the psychologists, are a combination of these two phenomena. When we think we hear our names called we undergo what is called an auditory hallucination. A little sound within the ear itself is taken up by our sub-conscious self and is translated into a name. The same thing is done in dreaming If we are asleep and a sudden noise awakens us the mind tries to explain what the noise is in the brief time between sleeping and waking. It explains it by a dream. For instance, if a shutter blows open we probably dream of being in an explosion, for thus the mind tries to account for the noise.

The noises in the shell are caused by the acoustic properties of the curves which gather and intensify sound vibration.

Those who hear voices in Mrs. Blake's trumpet, say the psychologists, simply hear the natural sounds as in the shell. But being in a condition of expectancy, the imagination goes to work and the mind of the listener forms the sounds into words and sentences. It is really form of self-hypnosis. It is a curious fact in relation to Mrs. Blake that the art of divination by listening to shells is an extremely ancient one. The Egyptian priests claimed to receive messages from their gods in this way and certain sects of the East Indians still use the conch shell for this purpose.

The real explanation being understood, it is interesting to see what the experimenters thought they found.

Interest in the case of Mrs. Blake on the part of Dr Hyslop and the Psychical Society was stimulated by written reports sent by Dr. L. V. Guthrie, Superintendent of the West Virginia Asylum at Huntington in that State, where the medium lives in humble circumstances and is very independent and capricious about receiving "sitters." Dr. Guthrie writes

"Her day sittings are conducted as follows: She has a tin horn or trumpet diminishing in size from the centre toward the end; the trumpet is about two feet long and two inches in diameter at the centre, gradually tapering down to about half an inch at each end. You sit along beside her, and she places one end of the trumpet in her hand and one end in yours and has it rest upon her lap until 'conditions' are good, when there seems to be a pulling at the trumpet, and frequently I have heard indistinguishable sounds apparently coming from the trumpet while it was lying on our laps. Now that 'conditions' have become good, the trumpet is placed one end to your ear and one end to hers, and the voices and conversations of the 'spirits' come through this trumpet into your ear You ask such questions as you wish and frequently Mrs. Blake will ask a few questions. During these [spirit] conversations Mrs. Blake's mouth is closed and there is no apparent movement of the muscles about the neck and head Sometimes she holds her end of the trumpet away from her ear and in front of her a foot and a half, and places her hand over the opening in the trumpet next to her and you still get the voices."

Dr Hyslop's voluminous record contains a vast amount of similar testimony, by a score or more of apparently-disinterested persons of both sexes, in several instances presented in the form of sworn affidavits. In each instance the "spirit" voices appeared to be within the trumpet, and could often be distinctly heard when the instrument was lying in the medium's lap

Following are paragraphs from his report.

"The object of the evening's visit was to try trumpet experiments, but Mrs. Blake and Mr Blake are evidently more impressed with the movement of psychical objects and were bent on a seance of that kind But we managed, by some tact, to try the trumpet I shall not describe in detail its positions at present, but it was sometimes held to her ear and the ear of the sitter, and sometimes only to the ear of the sitter and one end in Mrs. Blake's hand. Sometimes the palm of her hand was held over one end of the trumpet. At no time was the end of the trumpet held at her mouth Whatever view of the phenomena be taken we cannot suppose that they were produced by having her mouth at the end of the trumpet

"Near the beginning of the seance I held one end of the trumpet, and it was clear that articulate sounds were occurring in it. In some cases I could detect distinct words and the claim that a particular person was trying to communicate with me. I asked for the name, and it was some time before I could get anything quite clearly enough to recognize it. When it seemed like the word Ada, after trying Affie and suspecting Annie but not indicating it, I purposely recognized Ada and asked the relationship to me The answer was.

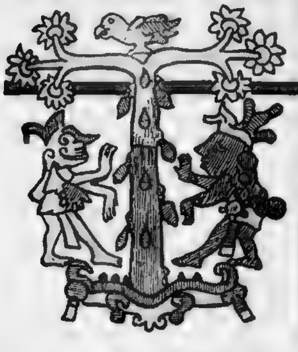
"'Don't you recognize me, father?'

"I took up the cue and pretended to recognize the name and played the part of father for some time without either lying or betraying that I was not such. I asked questions about her happiness and such things without suggesting any one else. Soon the trumpet was handed to Mr. Abbott or Mr. Clawson and the matter was dropped.. Now I have not a daughter or relative by the name of Ada and not one sound came through the trumpet to indicate any person I might recognize as pertinent.

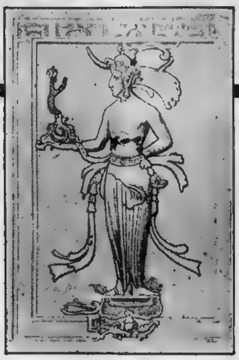
"On the whole my impression at present is that we are dealing with a woman who is consciously honest. I say this in spite of the very dubious character of her dark seances. They have a most damning suggestiveness as they are precisely like the fraudulent performance of the same type. It is in fact hard to reconcile them with any judgment of honesty whatever. But we must remember that we can no more prove dishonesty in the dark than we can genuineness, or we can equally prove one as the other. I have no positive proof that tricks were performed and I have no evidence that they were not."

Dr. Hyslop's investigations did not end here. Alone, and in company with persons chosen by himself, he was present at many "sittings" with Mrs. Blake. Long "spirit" conversations through the medium of the trumpet are quoted in the record.

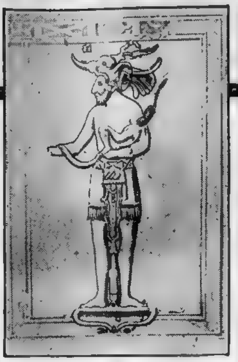
Where Did the Ancient Aztecs Get Their Bible Stories?



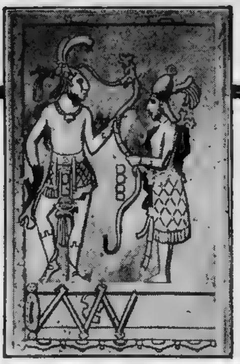
The Adam and Eve of the Aztecs Before the Tree of Knowledge. From Ancient Picture Writing Done Long Before the Spaniards Entered Mexico. The Lighter Figure Is Eve. The Snake Appears as a Bird.



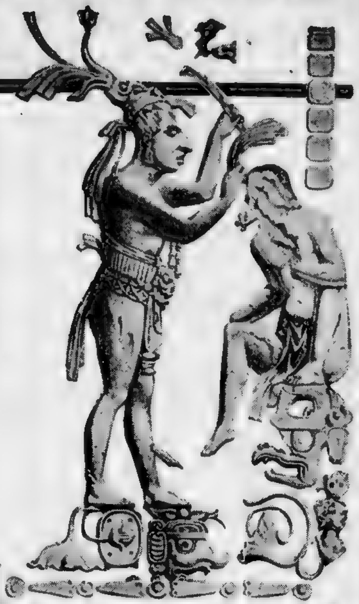
Eve of the Mayans, the Ancient Cultured Race That Preceded the Aztecs. This Newly Discovered Sculpture Probably Dates from 500 B. C.



The Mayan's Adam, a First Man Carrying His First Born. The Figure Is a Companion for Eve in the Same Set of Sculpture Just Found.



A Mayan Bas Relief Representing Eve Tempting Adam. The Two Are Seen Holding the Snake Which Is Counselling Them, and (to the Right) a Wall Sculpture Which Is Thought to Represent Adam and Abel.



Newly Discovered Records That Interpret Old and New Testament Legends, but Which Were Made Centuries Before the Christian World Ever Heard of America

Below Is the Wonderful Ruined Temple at Uxmal Known as the Temple of the Columns in Which Rituals Corresponding Strangely to the Christian Were Observed Long Before the Spanish Conquest.

RECENT discoveries among the ruined cities of Central America, notably by the party in Guatemala, and progress in interpreting those already found and copied in Mexico and Yucatan, have raised with greater force than ever the question of where the ancient Aztecs, the kindred races of the Central American States, and the mysterious Mayan race, which preceded the Aztecs, got their Old and New Testament legends.

The points of resemblance in the [illegible] and rituals of the old Americans and those used and practised by Christians are too close to be mere coincidences. Any court of law would pass upon them as derived from a common source.

And yet these traditions and observances were a familiar part of Mayan and Aztec life centuries before the discovery of America by Columbus, and the conquest of their civilization by marauding Spaniards.

The recent finds that have raised the mystery anew are panels and inscriptions and picture writings in which the legend of the Fall of Man is clearly indicated. Not only Eve, the first mother, is shown, but Adam. And one striking bas-relief presents the characters which have been identified as Adam and Eve, with the addition of the Subtle Serpent of the story. In this sculpture the snake is not, as usually depicted, coiled around the Tree of Life. It is held instead by Eve, and seems to be adding to its blandishments to hers while Adam stands listening.

Still other carvings have been interpreted as illustrating the various legends of the Patriarchs, and in one case there seems no doubt that a legend identical with the sacrifice of Isaac is depicted.

In fact, say the archaeologists, either here there is a series of coincidences unparalleled in history and well-nigh unbelievable, or else some one thoroughly schooled in Old and New Testament came into contact with the Mayans, the predecessors of the Aztecs, in some far distant time and partly, at least, converted them.

It is worthy of note that even at the time of the Conquest the priests who accompanied Cortez were struck by these resemblances. They found side by side with the basest and most brutal superstitions, the most familiar religious observances. There was, for instance, the ritual of the baptism of infants, and one can imagine the surprise of the conquerors when they saw the babies sprinkled with water just like a Christian babe, while the "heathen" priest prayed "the One Living God to permit the holy drops to wash away the sin that was given to it before the foundation of the world, so that this child may be born anew."

Still more curiously familiar were some of their prayers. "Wilt Thou blot us out, O Lord, forever," ran one of them. "Is this punishment intended not for our reformation, but for our destruction?" "Keep peace with all; bear injuries with humility; God, who sees all, will avenge you."

While the most striking parallel of all with the New Testament, notes the historian, Prescott, was the declaration in their moral code that "he who looks too curiously on a woman commits sin with his eyes."

Again the rite of confession was practised among the Aztecs, and among the exhortations of the priest was this one: "Clothe the naked and feed the hungry, whatever privations it may cost thee; for remember their flesh is like thine, and they are men like thee."

No mention, however, is made in the older writings of similar stories to the earliest legends of the Bible, the carven illustrations of which have just been recognized.

And here, too, it may be said that almost all the emblems of the Masonic order have been identified in the Yucatan buried cities, carven in their temples. There is even the Apron with the Eye set within the Triangle.

In connection with these discoveries an early theory has gained some credence. This is bound up with the story of Quetzalcoatl, the great white God of the Aztecs. The legend they held of him was that one day, back in the far distant past, a stranger of noble appearance, white and bearded, sailed in from the Atlantic Ocean in a bark of serpent skins. He taught them agriculture, gave them laws—and then, incurring the wrath of one of the principle gods of the country, sailed away after promising to return again with his sons and rule the country.

At the time of the Conquest there was a very explicit tradition of Quetzalcoatl which described his appearance with a convincing minuteness. The legend, in fact, did much to assist the Spaniards in conquering the country, because the superstitious Montezuma, the ruler, was persuaded that the Spaniards were those of whom Quetzalcoatl had prophesied.

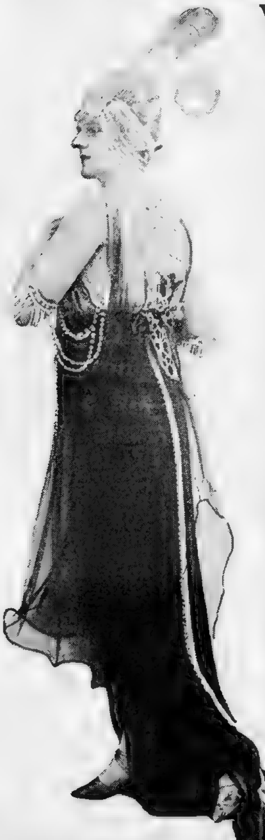
It has been held by some scholars that Quetzalcoatl was really the apostle Thomas. The Aztec name means feathered serpent, but the last syllable also means "twin." Didymus, the Greek for Thomas, also signifies a twin. This seems slight ground for such a startling identification, but an analysis of all the facts seems to prove that centuries before Columbus a white man did actually visit the Mayans. He taught them many things, and in the laws he gave them were, it seems, the moral observances and the legends mentioned. The priests of the native gods, fearing the influence his teachings were gaining, expelled him from the country. The lessons remained fixed in the memories of those he had taught, however, and were pictured in the stones so recently identified. At the same time, side by side, with the stranger's code was observed the code of the ancient gods. Only in this way can the mystery be at all answered. Who Quetzalcoatl really was can never be known, but he must have been a Christian, and a man of enormously strong personality.

It is another odd thing, in passing, that in the picture writings identified as telling the story of the Fall, the Tree of Knowledge is often depicted as a cocoa tree, and a bird takes the place of the serpent.

Another significant fact is the use of the symbol of the cross in the great sacred city of Palenque.

This was first observed in the famous tablet of the cross discovered at Palenque. It formed part of the Group of the Cross, a remarkable ornament on one of the principal temples. This group shows a cross-like structure with a human figure at each side, and other details. It is covered with closely set hieroglyphic characters. Apparently a scene closely resembling the basic act of the Christian religion is here represented. Whether this is a mere coincidence, or whether Christianity was brought to this land in some forgotten period, is an unsolved mystery.

The Dress That Made Paris Vow to Reform Its Fashions



The Latest Paris Fashion Creation Which Was Pronounced "Highly artistic, but not suitable for purely social occasions."

THE world has doubtless been surprised by the news that Paris leaders of fashion have declared that Paris fashions must be more modest.

The world, and particularly the American part of it, have had an idea that Paris and modesty were not on speaking terms, but they were mistaken.

Here is the gown that made the Parisian society leaders declare that this sort of thing had gone far enough.

It is said to be the most decollete costume ever worn in a respectable public place. It was designed by one of the most noted couturiers of Paris, and was greatly deplored by society because the very best designers have, as a rule, refused to follow the extremes in undress, for which Parisian fashions have recently become notorious.

The offending gown was worn by one of the handsomest and best known actresses of Paris. She appeared in it one evening at one of the best restaurants of the city, before a large gathering of men and women of high social position, including a number of American visitors.

Several Frenchwomen, including a distinguished duchess, who was accompanied by her daughter, withdrew from the restaurant when they saw the startling dress.

It is urged on behalf of the dress that it is beautiful and artistic. This fact is admitted by many of those who criticized it. They even admit that it might not be considered offensive or be out of place on the stage, but it is pronounced to be entirely unsuited for purely social occasions. Those who are seeking to correct the taste of Paris maintain that dress in society must be regarded to some extent as a covering for the body, and not simply as an ornament and a means of enhancing its semi-nudity.

This gown is cut down to the waist at the back, and nearly as low in front. It is held to the shoulders by a very open network of pearls. A light swathing of very transparent gauze is thrown over the shoulders. This hides nothing, but lends an additional softness and allurement to the expanse of white flesh seen through it.

The skirt is a gracefully draped affair of velvet liberally slit in front and exposing bare limbs shod with shoes of a modified sandal type.

It is significant that immediately after the apparition of this gown the leading titled women of Paris society issued their manifesto, urging all women of good breeding to do their utmost to discourage immodest and extreme fashions.

Hence, many now speak of it as "the gown that made us reform."

There were, however, many other facts that led the more serious element in society to feel that it was time to call a halt.

To Make Shipwreck Perfectly Safe

A VERY ingenious device has been invented by a German, Gustav Heinrich, which he declares will deprive shipwreck of all its terrors under all circumstances.

Furnished with this device a passenger might be thrown into mid-Atlantic and live in comfort for many days while waiting to be picked up.

The apparatus is made of watertight canvas. It has sleeves ending in gloves. There is a port hole in the head which can be closed when the weather is rough. When the port hole is closed air enters through a tube above the head. No water can enter through this.

The man or woman using this device stands with his feet in a sort of bucket which forms the base. This bucket takes in a certain quantity of water which acts as ballast, and keeps the lifesaver and its occupant upright. Sufficient food and drink can be taken aboard to keep the passenger alive for a week or more.

The apparatus is provided with a revolver and signal lights, with which the shipwrecked passenger can signal for help by day or night. Attached to the apparatus are ropes by which two or three people can keep themselves afloat if they have not the good fortune to have life-saving outfits of their own.

It is proposed that one suit of this kind should be provided for every person on a ship. At present, as has been proved by many terrible disasters, there are no adequate provisions for saving life in case of a sudden sinking of the ship through collision or any other cause.

The boats are not sufficient to carry all passengers, and it seems doubtful whether a sufficient number will ever be provided, although an unusually active movement for insuring safety at sea has been going on lately. In any case shipwrecked passengers may be thrown in the sea with such haste that there is no chance for them to get into the boats. In such accidents the boats may be sunk or made useless from many causes.

The lifesaving suits at present provided are comparatively little use in case of a shipwreck in midocean.

How Your MUSCLES Tell You WHAT TIME IT IS

When They Fail to Measure Off the Minutes Almost as Accurately as a Watch Something Is Wrong with Your Health

By LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG,
A. B., M. A., M. D. (Johns Hopkins)

JUST as there are a number of persons who are wholly at sea in a strange place because they lack all sense of space and direction, so there are a few persons who cannot tell the time without a watch or clock.

Most of us, however, can measure the passage of time quite accurately without ever glancing at a watch or clock dial. We sometimes think we do this by intuition; but, as a matter of fact, there is quite a different reason to account for this convenient ability to tell what time it is without the aid of a timepiece.

Take, for instance, the case of Mr. Brown. He enters a barber shop. It is 11:45 by all the clocks and watches within reach or sight. Half a dozen men are ahead of him. One by one they leave the chairs until at last his turn is reached. He has a shave, a hair cut, a shampoo, and several other of the tonsorial performances carried out.

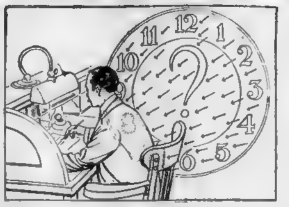
Suddenly the thought occurs to him: "I wonder what time it is." He is flat on his back in the chair, with his face swathed in towels, so that he cannot see the clock or take out his watch. The barber is keeping up such an endless harangue that to think of asking him for the desired information is quite out of the question.

Then Brown's mental wheels and springs begin to work unconsciously and presently he says to himself: "It must be about 1:30."

Nine times out of ten Brown hits the hour almost to the minute. You do the same thing many times a day. Indeed, so common is the nearly correct estimate of even the most ignorant, untrained person about the fleeting moment that if you happen to think it three o'clock and find it to be only two you are considerably flabbergasted.

What is the explanation of this? How is it possible for you to tell time when there is neither sun, star, watch or clock to consult? Why is it that even children and unlettered persons can come within the fraction of a moment of a true measure of the time?

Dr. George McBride, a psychologist of note, has recently spent some months studying this problem in connection with dreams, drownings and accidents. Roofers, flagpole painters, builders and other workers on high places, who sometimes survive dangerous falls, reported to Dr. McBride that during the minute or less they were falling, the whole course of their lives flitted before them with wonderful vividness. The things which had taken months or years to do were re-enacted in a few seconds.



"Every fraction of a second of passing time is unconsciously registered on the body's muscles and other tissues."

Men rescued from drowning, and those who have been near death from accidents or diseases, have the same experiences to report. In dreams, too, events which would require years to live through in reality occupy only a few seconds of sleep.

All this made it all the more difficult for Dr. McBride to discover how it is that ordinarily almost everyone can hit the time with surety without any form of chronometer.

After elaborate experiments and researches on all sorts of subjects, ninety per cent of whom always come within a few minutes of guessing the time, the psychologist concludes that it is a mathematical summation of different things which produces this ability. In other words, habit plus experience plus memory plus knowledge of one sort or another of the elements involved in a particular act or feeling operates through your living tissues, especially muscles, to tell you the time.

When a woman has a dress fitted, cooks a dinner, makes the beds and dusts a room, or when a man gets shaved, has his teeth filled, or opens his morning mail, he is more or less unconsciously aware from long custom just what his muscles are doing, just what his tissue juices are at, and how long it all takes.

Even though his brain and senses do not remember, the muscles and the active juice-making organs of the body do take note of it. Every fraction of activity and passing time—for these are the same—is impressed into the flesh, even though never expressed.

The upshot of all this, explains Dr. McBride, clearly accounts for the strange power possessed by almost everyone, to guess the time quickly and accurately without a timepiece. This has, he says, been wrongly attributed to occult and mysterious powers such as intuition, instinct, and the like. Actually it is the same as that displayed by various water animals and plants, which, on being transplanted to dry land, continue to ebb and flow, open and close their mouths with the tide.

It is all due to habit. Just as most healthy men breathe seventeen times a minute and have a pulse beat seventy-two times a minute, so all the tissues have a tendency to take on a harmonious time rhythm.

Indeed, all nature seems to do so, even the inanimate spheres and celestial bodies. All have cycles, even comets. The unit of time of Halley's comet around the sun is seventy odd times [illegible] the earth's. In fact, the whole solar system of which the earth and sun are a part may have a [illegible] times longer than ours.

Plainly, then, it is a sign of poor health if you cannot approximate very closely the passage of time. If this failure happens only occasionally [illegible] due to fatigue or some passing indisposition [illegible] becomes habitual it is an indication that there is [illegible] serious derangement of the body's tissues.

How to MAKE FLOWERS ANY COLOR YOU PLEASE

DO you wish to obtain pink snow drops and blue tulips? A gardener in Holland, who many years ago produced a blue tulip, was offered the fabulous sum of eleven thousand francs for it. He refused the offer, thinking to make much more by growing more blue tulips now that he had succeeded in obtaining his first blue tulip bulb. Alas! When that particular tulip bloomed again, it bloomed white, and no one ever again beheld a blue tulip.

Yet, if you wish, you can produce a blue tulip, a pink lily of the valley, a scarlet narcissus. How? It is all very simple.

Buy some aniline dyes at your druggist, choosing those which are easily soluble in water, such as scarlet, carmine, indigo. Or, if your mother has any of last season's Easter egg dyes left over, or if she has been dying dress goods, a solution of those will do.

By placing the flowers in these solutions of dye, you can obtain an infinite variety of "new species." By mixing a red and a blue dye, you can obtain purple or violet, and if you will employ a little judgment in tinting the flowers you can obtain some startling effects. White flowers, placed in any of these dyes, assume the color of that dye, but a yellow rose placed in a scarlet bath becomes spotted or streaky. Camellias and white lilac show the oddest markings.

The flowers to be tinted must not be immersed in a bath of dye, but should be placed stem downward in a glass containing the dye, as if being placed in water. The color will not wash off, and oddly enough, the dye seems to act as a mild preservative, for the flowers will last several days longer than if placed in ordinary water.

The New Bows and Sashes

Spring's Oddities and Tendencies Described by Lady Duff-Gordon.

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed

Lady Duff-Gordon's Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

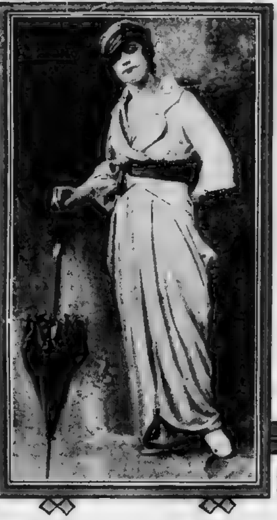
By Lady Duff-Gordon

LIKE the sky after a rain is the modish costume of the moment. The simile is suggested to me by the dark hues of the silks and crepes comprising the gowns of Spring, but more especially by the rainbow effect contributed by the sashes and large bows, without which no gown is chic.

The black silk street costume shown on this page is an illustration of a method which I have made popular. It has a short coat that ends just below the bust and is gathered softly there and finished with a button and loop of the same material. The sleeves are long and tight. At the back it is finished with an upstanding plaiting of the same black silk. Over this falls a soft, broad, full flounce-like collar in revers effect, of white mousseline de soie. The skirt is gathered closely about the body, but rendered loose about the feet for convenience in walking by that gathered-in-front, shawl-like effect, which gives the body the effect of having been carelessly swathed in the silk, a carelessness that is the triumph of art, a most expensive simplicity. Wound about the waist and far above the belt line is the note of color, the rainbow effect, given by a large, full sash of green silk.

The costume of white crepe shown in the next picture is cut low and open in front. The loosely fitted coat ends in a point in the back. The skirt, draped in long loose folds in front and gathered in fuller fold at the side, opens in front and at the front hem, showing a foundation of moire silk. The draped girdle of red silk is finished by short embroidered ends in Oriental design. The three-quarter length sleeves are cut away beneath the elbow, showing the large cuff of a white lace blouse. A hat, whose crown is of white crepe and whose brim and surrounding ribbon is of red silk, is the apex of this favorite creation of mine.



"The costume of white crepe has its color accent in the soft girdle of red silk. The short ends of the girdle are embroidered in Oriental design in dull colors."

A most daring innovation, successful rival in audacity of the skirt slit to the knee, is the pearl gray serge walking suit, with long, full skirted coat, reproduced on this page. The back seam, finished by stitching to the knees and outlined by a row of large pearl buttons, contains the sartorial joker. The buttonholed side of the skirt is folded back and securely fastened, disclosing the cherry-colored lining of the skirt. It discloses more, much more, for it makes no secret of the intimate garment of many flounces of white net trimmed with broad bands of white satin reaching to the ankle and daringly transparent. This is the latest Parisian audacity

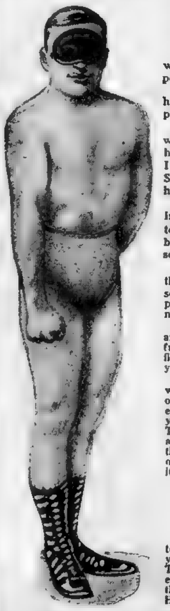
"Wound around the waist and far above the belt line of this street costume is a sash of green silk, falling in a long loop below the right hip.

"A most daring innovation, successful rival to the skirt slit to the knee in front. This latest Parisian audacity I have named the Pierrette."



TION FOR YEARS

"Gains 22 Pounds in 23 Days"

"I was all run down to the very bottom," writes F. Gagnon. "I had to quit work I was so weak. Now, thanks to Sargol, I look like a new man. I gained 22 pounds in 23 days.

"Sargol has put just 10 pounds on me in 14 days," states W. D. Roberts. "It has made me sleep well, enjoy what I ate and enabled me to work with interest and pleasure."

"I weighed 132 pounds when I commenced taking Sargol. After taking 20 days I weighed 144 pounds. Sargol is the most wonderful preparation of flesh building I have ever seen," declares D. Martin, and J. Meier adds: "For the past twenty years I have taken medicine every day for indigestion and got thinner every year. I took Sargol for forty days and feel better than I have felt in twenty years. My weight has increased from 150 to 170 pounds."

When hundreds of men and women—and there are hundreds, with more coming every day—living in every nook and corner of this broad land, voluntarily testify to weight increases ranging all the way from 10 to 35 pounds given them by Sargol, you must admit, Mr. and Mrs. and Miss Thin Reader, that there must be something in this Sargol method of flesh building after all.

Hadn't you better look into it, just as thousands of others have done? Many thin folks say: "I'd give most anything to put on a little extra weight," but when some one suggests a way they exclaim, "Not a chance. Nothing will make me plump. I'm built to stay thin." Until you have tried Sargol, you do not and cannot know that this is true.

Sargol has put pounds of healthy "stay there" flesh on hundreds who doubted and in spite of their doubts. You don't have to believe in Sargol to grow plump from its use. You just take it and watch weight pile up, hollows vanish and your figure round out to pleasing and normal proportions. You weigh yourself when you begin and again when you finish, and you let the scales tell the story.

Sargol is absolutely harmless. It is a tiny concentrated tablet. You take one with every meal. It mixes with the food you eat for the purpose of separating all of its flesh-producing ingredients. It prepares these fat-making elements in an easily assimilated form, which the blood can readily absorb and carry all over your body. Plump, well-developed persons don't need Sargol to produce this result. Their assimilative machinery performs its functions without aid. But thin folks' assimilative organs do not. This fatty portion of their food now goes to waste through their bodies like unburned coal through an open grate. A few days' test of Sargol in your case will surely prove whether or not this is true of you. Isn't it worth trying?

50c BOX FREE

To enable any thin reader, 10 pounds or more under weight, to easily make this test, we will give a 50c box of Sargol absolutely free. Either Sargol will increase your weight or it won't, and the only way to know is to try it. Send for this Free Test Package to-day, enclosing 10c in silver or stamps to help pay postage, packing, etc., and a full-size 50c package will be sent by return mail free of charge. Mail this coupon with your letter to the SARGOL CO., 371-T, HERALD BLDG., BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

If you want a beautiful and well-rounded figure of symmetrical proportions, if you want to gain some solid pounds of healthy "stay there" flesh, if you want to increase your weight to normal—weigh what you should weigh—accept this Free 50c Package to-day.

[illegible] EXPENSE

This coupon entitles any person to one 50c package of Sargol, the concentrated Flesh Builder (provided you have never tried it), and that 10c is enclosed to cover postage, packing, etc. Read our advertisement printed above, and then put 10c in silver in letter to-day, with coupon, and the full 50c package will be sent you by return post. THE ANCIENT LIE

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company.
Great Britain Rights Reserved.

THIS is the best picture for young men and women that we have printed in many a day.

It is the best for older men and women whose courage is not gone and whose success is still to come.

Over the mountain "It Can't Be Done" and down to the happy valley of success and usefulness have passed a great army of the world's noble workers.

It is a high mountain, rugged, bleak. Many camp down before it in hopeless submission and never try to climb.

But it can be overcome, the passes are there, safe enough for those that do not fear, and the highest point can be crossed in safety by the men and women whose motto is "IT SHALL BE DONE." and I shall be the one to do it.

* * *

All the history of the world worth while is that of the men and the women who have crossed this mountain refusing, in the words of the great Napoleon, "to believe the fools who said it could not be done."

But the World's greatest fighter came up from the nothingless unknown Corsican boy to the World's ruler because he knew THAT IT COULD BE DONE.

They praised him when he had crossed the Alps in Winter. He said, "That was nothing; Winter is the best time, for then the snow does not slide. I deserve no credit except for refusing to believe the fools who said "IT CAN'T BE DONE."

Blake, whom you know as a great fighting English Admiral, was more than fifty years of age before he had ever commanded on board a battleship.

English fleets were being destroyed. No progress was made. Old as he was and without knowledge of the sea, past the half-century mark, he took command, AND CONQUERED.

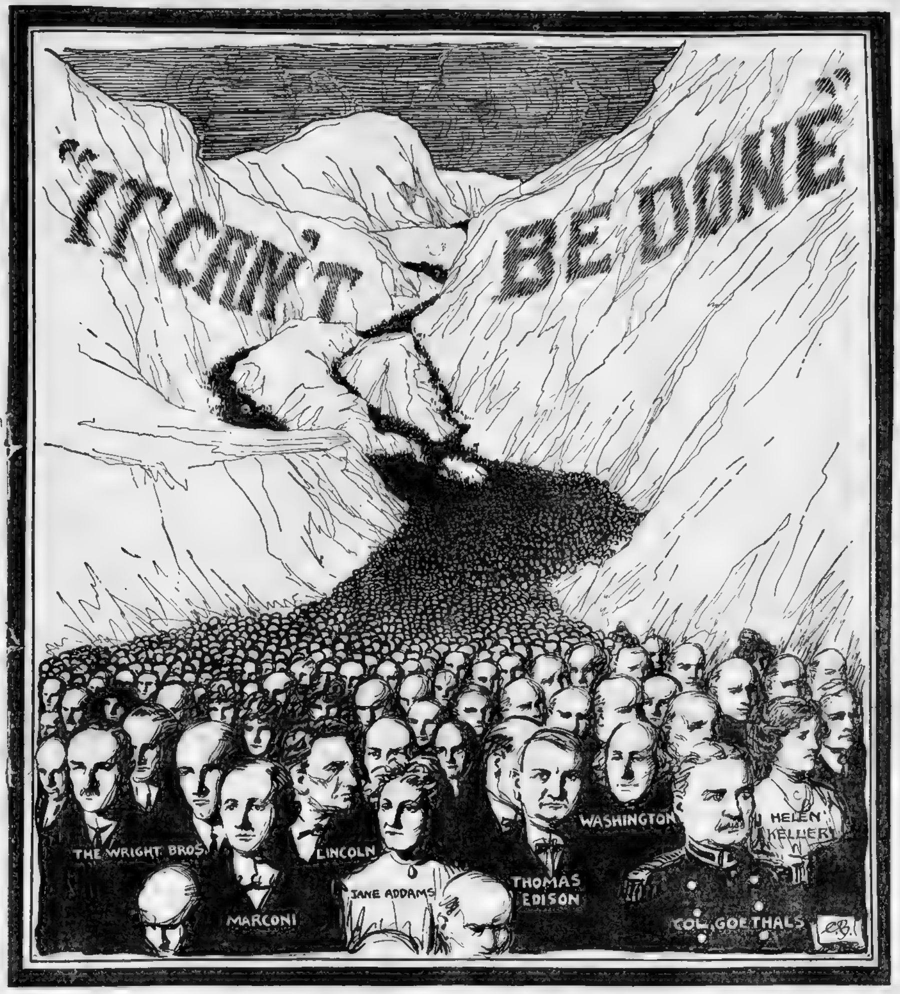
Every monument on this earth that is deserved, every name that has earned honor in history recalls some human being possessing the courage to cross the mountain of Impossible.

Let that thought remain in your mind, whether your task and your ambition be big or little. Cut out this picture, keep it where you can look at it and show it to your friends.

Look every now and then at the great crowd of the world's real workers crossing the mountain "It Can't Be Done," and resolve that no such mountain and no such words shall keep you back or discourage you.

Mr. Bachelor, the artist whose admirable idea is expressed in this picture, uses a few of the faces that RECENTLY have conquered the Impossible.

Look at them. Compare every problem with your own AND TAKE COURAGE.



"It Can't Be Done" Is the Name of the Mountain That Greatness Must Cross.

"It Can't Be Done" Is the Ancient Lie That Men and Women of Power Have Defied and Overcome.

"It Can't Be Done" Is the Lie That Makes a Fence Around So Many of Us and Keeps Us Small.

IT CAN BE DONE Is the Truth That Makes Men Free.

There is Helen Keller. She, indeed, might be excused for saying "It Can't Be Done."

She was born blind, deaf and dumb.

Well might she have said, "Send me back to the darkness whence I came, for without speech, or eye, or ear, I can do nothing here."

To-day that girl talks, she reads the speech of others by putting her fingers on their lips. She knows more than one language well, she is acquainted with the history and science of the human race. She is a living inspiration to millions, a noble rebuke to every coward and weakling and every doubter, and all because that in the brain that had never heard a sound, or seen the light, the words were ringing, "IT CAN BE AND IT SHALL BE DONE."

There is Washington, beaten, betrayed, abandoned, but never discouraged. His courage made this country what it is. Would that his spirit were to-day in the place that it formerly held.

There is Lincoln, who kept united the nation that Washington established, a man of kind heart, and of peace.

Would that Lincoln's spirit were in Washington to-day, where the National Administration needs it sadly.

* * *

In this picture you see the heroes of industry and science, all men that have passed the mountain of "It Can't Be Done."

Wright brothers found humanity fastened to the earth. They gave wings to the human race.

Marconi, the Italian, gave to humanity a voice that crosses oceans and continents. He knew it could be done.

There is Edison, who was put to work as a boy taking one single message over one wire when the world did not know the power it was using. He came through the mountain and brought the multiple message, the phonograph and the electric light with it.

There is Goethals, who did the work at Panama, upon which scores of millions and the efforts of hundreds of engineers and scientists had only resulted in another, "It Can't Be Done."

HE DID IT.

He turned swamps and cuts and slides into a permanent canal, a new highway for the world and new victory for man in his conquest of the earth.

There is Jane Addams, who had done for moral and intellectual swamps what Goethals did in his work at Panama.

* * *

Only one thing is worth while in this life, and that is ACCOMPLISHMENT.

Only one thing is truly honorable, and that is to add something to the inheritance, knowledge, power and earth control that past generations have handed down to us.

Man began here the feeblest of the big animals, hunted by them all and fearing them all.

He has ended by hunting and destroying them all. He has made the earth his own, because from the start, savage, ignorant, feeble as he was, he put out of his mind the words "It Can't Be Done."

* * *

Readers, this picture and this mountain interest our nation very greatly today.

For we need as leader of the nation a man to cross the mountain and take civilization and the world's knowledge into Mexico.

We need courage and efficiency and consciences that will not listen to the words "It Can't Be Done" or reach feebly for any chance to avoid the task.

The nation will find the leader. The mountain will be crossed. The power of the nation will spread in that Mexican territory of crime and disorder eventually.

Historians who write of our work in Mexico will say, "It Could Be Done, and It Has Been Done."

But do not look upon this picture as merely a lesson for others. It is first of all a lesson for each man who looks upon it.

What is YOUR problem? It can be done.

The Perils of Pauline

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS.

Stanford Marvin, a wealthy manufacturer of automobiles, has worn himself out by overwork. His son, Harry, and his adopted daughter, Pauline, love each other, but she wants two years of thrilling experiences seeing life before marrying. Her reason is that she is ambitious to be a writer. Old Mr. Marvin asks to see what she has written. While Pauline and Harry are in search of a magazine containing her story, Mr. Marvin opens the case of a mummy which has just arrived from Egypt. Raymond Owen, his rascally private secretary, helps lift off the front of the case, but leaves the old man to remove the mummy's bandages alone. Mr. Marvin, during a fainting spell, sees the half exposed mummy come to life, step out of her case, take a bracelet from her wrist and try to force it into his nerveless grasp, while her lips whisper a strange message from the remote past.

Restored to consciousness by Harry and Pauline, the old man believes it to be a dream until later he finds the identical bracelet on the mummy's skeleton wrist. He promises Pauline one year to see life and places her in the guardianship of Owen. A final heart attack gives him just time to write on the doctor's prescription blank a brief will. Then he dies. A lawyer tells Owen that he would have permanent charge of Pauline's estate if something should happen to her before marriage. Hicks, a racetrack man, whispers a suggestion to Owen, but the secretary refuses to have anything to do with him, for the time at least. Hicks and Owen introduce a reformed pirate, who tells Pauline of hidden treasure, and they take passage to the island of Nassau to recover the treasure. Harry manages to get on board the yacht disguised as a half-breed cook.

CHAPTER VIII.

"THE trouble is you have no respect for a potato, Filipo. You pay no attention to the little things that count so much in cooking—just as they do in life. You slash the poor thing to pieces, very wastefully, and then you boil it only long enough to hurt its feelings. It isn't any good to anyone after that."

Pauline was endeavoring to explain the rudiments of the culinary art to the cook, who listened with a manner of self-abasement.

"Peel potato nice, good," he apologized. "Then peel um pirate. Filipo want to peel pirate; boil him just half—hurt him feelings. That's how."

"Oh, I see. But I think you do Mr. Boyd a great injustice, Filipo. He has consented to come all the way from New York with us and take command of our boat and find the buried treasure, and"——

"Buried potatoes," snapped Filipo with a sudden reversion to his unimpaired English.

"Well, at least you understand about to-morrow's breakfast now, don't you?"

"Yes, mem. Boil um eggs to death; no peel 'um."

"No, no, no, Filipo—boil them two minutes and a half. Here, take my watch and go by that."

As Filipo took the tiny diamond-scarred timepiece from Pauline's hand there was a sound as of some one choking at the top of the steps.

The cook sprang to the deck, but there was no one in sight. He returned to Pauline, while Blinky Boyd, gasping more from astonishment than fear, reeled up to Owen and Hicks on the forward deck.

"She's gone clean crazy," he panted. "She treats that there cook as if he was a nat'ral human man instid of a sea-rovin' gorilla, worse'n the one I beat in Afriky."

"No more gorillas for a while, Blinky," commanded Hicks. "What's happened now?"

"She's gone an' guv him her jooled watch to boil eggs by," said the pirate.

"By George, we WILL have to do something with that fellow," muttered Hicks to Owen as they walked away. "Did you see what he dropped at dinner—and grabbed up again?"

"Yes," said Owen.

"You must be very careful of it, Filipo."

"Yes, mem; boil 'um long time; stick fork in, see when soft."

"No!"

Pauline caught the watch from him. "You DON'T boil the watch at ALL, Filipo. You boil the eggs and look at the watch. Can you tell time, Filipo?"

"Yes, mem."

"How long is an hour?"

"Peel potatoes—hour is ver' ver' long. Talk to ship's lady—whisht!—hour is no time," answered Filipo with upcast hands.

Again she eyed him through her long lashes a little askance. He was rather subtle, this half-breed cook, for one who could not even boil an egg.

"I will let you take the watch, Filipo," she said gravely, "but you must give it back to me. It is one of the most precious things I have. It was given to me by—Filipo, were you ever in love with a girl?"

"Su-u-ure, MEM!" replied the cook with sudden enthusiasm. "Love daughter big American—no love me. Big American daughter start from Nassau—get buried treasure—not!"

"Filipo, where [illegible] you get all your New York slang?"

"Big Americar [illegible]ghter; she sling slang—good," sai[illegible]o.

"Why did you [illegible] in love with her?"

"Nice girl—no eat much, no scold cook, no talk about potatoes—just big fool bout buried treasure."

"What do you think love is?"

"Love—huh!" grunted the cook. "I like girl; girl no like me. Chase all 'round world—no good."

"That watch was given to me by the man I love, Filipo," said Pauline. "You won't—boil it—or anything, will you?"

"Only two minutes, one half—stick fork in, see what time is"——

"I will get breakfast, Filipo. You may give me back the watch."

"Good," he said. "You get up 4 'clock morning. Filipo sleep. Good."

"DO suthin' to him!" Blinky Boyd was fuming in the wake of Owen and Hicks on their stroll updeck. "Do everythin' to him; make 'im walk the old board; draw'n quarter 'im. Didn't he attempt me life an' ain't he at present engaged in stealin' the fambly jools?"

"Well, have you got any ideas?" asked Owen.

"The first thing," whispered Blinky, "is to git him under the in-FLOO-ence of licker. They never was no cook could stand up agin' the disgraceful habit o' takin' too much and doin' too little. Get 'im under the in-FLOO-ence."

"And then what?"

"Then—well, ain't they a lot o' good blue water floatin' around atop the fishes? Ain't they some accommodatin' sharks swimmin' atop the water. Or ain't they?"

"That's a bit crude—just to throw a man overboard—for nothing," said Owen, willing to arouse Boyd's anger.

"Fer nothin'? Didn't he insult the master o' this ship. Ain't he tried to starve us to death? Fer wot kind o' nothin', says I." Boyd smote his caving chest in emphasis of his accusations.

"And he would have the diamond watch on him—in case he should be picked up," suggested Hicks quietly.

"That's so," said Owen. "He would have been swimming to shore with the stolen watch—and drowned.

"But, of course, he WOULD swim to shore, unless—well, it's a case of making sure beforehand. We could persuade him to go in and try to kill Blinky here while Blinky's asleep—then rush in and finish him. Even Pauline was a witness to the attack he made on Blinky this afternoon."

The pirate's glowing countenance suddenly went white.

"Not this trip," he said fervently. "I ain't goin' to kill no man in a trap like that. I'm goin' to see it done fair and square in the open—with plenty o' drink in 'im an' 'is conscience clear. I wouldn't see no man die with murder in 'is heart—fer me."

"I don't like it," said Owen nervously. "I don't like the idea of doing too much. We've got one big piece of work to do—that concerns HER." He nodded in the direction of the cabin. "D'ye mean to say we can't get a poor half-breed cook off this boat without killing him? Why not discharge him?"

Hicks uttered a grim chuckle. "I must say I never thought of that. Get a boat manned, will you, Boyd, and we'll put him ashore within half an hour."

"All hands for'ard," bellowed the pirate's voice. The "all hands" were Owen, Hicks, the pirate and Pauline.

"Why all hands? Can't you handle the cook yourself?" said Owen.

"Not to put THAT cook ashore—ye need a navy," said Boyd.

Backed by Owen and Hicks, he moved to the cabin.

"You, cook, there—ye're fired. Get off the boat. Yer kerriage waits," he cried down at the busy Filipo.

Filipo shuffled almost meekly toward the speaker. He saw the skiff alongside and Hicks and Owen near by.

"Grab 'im," ordered the pirate. "Here's the irons." He produced a pair of rusty handcuffs that had been brought along, among other ominous-looking junk, to impress Pauline.

But Filipo was not "fired" yet. With a sudden long-distance lunge he knocked down the pirate, who thought he was at a safe distance. But Hicks, who was well schooled in street-fight tactics thoughtfully stuck out a leg and tripped the cook, who fell upon the groaning Boyd. Boyd, though down, was by no means "out," and held Filipo tight while Owen and Hicks slipped on the handcuffs.

"Now to the boat with 'im an' dump 'im ashore wherever it looks hottest an' hungriest."

"Yah," he snarled in the face of the prostrate cook, "ye don't interfere no more with the capting of this here vessel. I hopes ye"——

But his sentence was cut short, or rather it ended in a shriek of pain and fright, as the cook, suddenly swinging himself from his shoulders, landed a terrifically propelled right foot in the pirate's middle.

He was pinned down again the next moment, but Boyd's yell had penetrated to the cabin.

"What is the matter—who is hurt?" cried Pauline, rushing to the group on deck.

"We have had to order this fellow put ashore. He has twice attacked Boyd, and besides he is useless as a cook," explained Owen.

"You will assuredly do nothing of the sort," announced Pauline. "You will take those horrid iron things right off and set him free."

"But, my dear Miss Marvin, he is a desperate man. It is dangerous"——

"What did we come here for but to get into danger?" cried Pauline. "Besides, Filipo is the most interesting person on the ship. I have just devoted a chapter to him in my book, and if you think I'm going to spoil my book because Mr. Boyd gets hurt, or the potatoes aren't done, you're much mistaken."

Owen obediently knelt and unlocked the clumsy handcuffs.

"You are free, Filipo," said Pauline with the air of a proud princess releasing a serf.

"No fired?" grunted Filipo. "Too bad. Bum job."

"Now go back to the kitchen, and promise not to strike Mr. Boyd any more."

"No hit 'um. Boil 'um three minutes; stick fork in 'um," said the cook with a cannibal glare at the still writhing pirate.

He shuffled off to his pots and pans. Blinky scrambled to his bunk, and Pauline retired to elaborate the fascinating character of Filipo in another chapter of her book of adventure.

She wrote until far into the night. At last she felt she was achieving what the editors had said she lacked—experience. And though no desperate adventure had yet crossed her path, she felt sure that many a one was near at hand—out there across the blue, starlit dark and the rolling bay.

She did not realize how late it was when at last she put down her pen and moved with soft, slippered steps to the door of the cabin.

Over the great vault of the heavens the stars were sprinkled like silver dust. The boat rolled softly, dreamily on the listless waters. A cool breeze scented with the fragrance of the spicy land cooled her brow. She realized that her little stateroom had been very stuffy. It was beautiful here in the hushed night alone. She moved out on deck.

They had come to anchor for the night off St. Andrew, and the few faint lights of the town tinged the scene with life.

Pauline was thinking of Harry. It would have been nice if he were here—now, in the moonlight—just for this evening. Of course if he were a regular member of the party, he would spoil the trip by his grumpiness, and probably prevent them from finding any treasure at all. But Harry was a good companion—usually, and Pauline was getting a little tired of the company on the yacht.

The night was so still that even her light footstep could be heard on the deck. And she was surprised to hear a muffled hail from some invisible craft astern.

As she moved to the rail—her tall form in the yachting suit standing out plainly in the moonlight—she saw a small boat scurry away. She thought she recognized their own small boat—the one the yacht towed; and she quickly made sure that this was true.

The boat was missing. Pauline turned towards the cabin to rouse the others for a real pirate chase, when she was silenced and stunned by the sight of Filipo, the cook, staggering out of the galley, with his bearded chin drooping on his breast, his knees swaying under him, his arms weaving cubist caricatures in the air and his voice raised in unintelligible song.

He was quickly followed by the Pirate, who, to Pauline's amazement, actually presented a picture of sobriety in contrast to Filipo.

But on seeing her, Boyd looked frightened.

"They have stolen the skiff," cried Pauline.

"No, Miss," said Boyd, "they was four of 'em come aboard in one boat, an' we let 'em take ourn ashore to bring a double load o' supplies."

Pauline was grievously disappointed. She turned her wrath upon the musical and meandering Filipo.

"Filipo!" she demanded. "Go to bed at once."

For answer he reeled towards her.

"Cook boiled—boiled three minute," he said.

Then with a lurch he fell sprawling at her feet.

Boyd had started back to the cabin in haste and excitement. Pauline's first instinct was to leave the inebriated man, but pity mastered her and she stooped to lift him.

Harry Reveals to Pauline His Disguise as a Half-Breed Cook—and They Suddenly Discover That a Clock-Work Bomb Is Hidden on the Yacht.

He sprang to his feet without her aid. His blue eyes looked clearly into hers. His body towered again to its commanding height as it had done when he was about to finish the Pirate.

He stooped and spoke rapidly, sharply in her ear. There was no pigeon chatter. It was straight English.

But as the door of the cabin opened again and Boyd came out, the tall form sank into itself, the knees began to rock, the arms to weave and, staggering back up the deck, he disappeared in the cabin.

Pauline stood stupefied. She had been so startled by the sudden transformation of the man that she had hardly understood his strident words.

Only one thing she could remember. He had commanded her to go to bed and bar her door. She obeyed that command.

She could not sleep at first. It seemed that hours had passed when a sound outside her door brought her to her feet in alarm.

She moved to the door and softly opened it. Across the threshold lay Filipo, wide awake.

"Go to bed," he said. Again she obeyed and this time she slept.

The next morning passed under a strain of tense excitement on the yacht. Everything seemed outwardly as usual. The skiff had been restored to its place astern. The Pirate was intoxicated; the cook sober. But there was the threat of trouble in the air, Pauline felt—in the attitude of all the men, even of Owen and Hicks.

The Pirate showed a strange new tendency to make friends with Filipo.

"Can you steer, cook?" he asked after the latter had announced that dinner was ready.

"Yes," said Filipo.

"All right, take the wheel and keep her as she's going till we round that point ahead there."

Filipo took the wheel and the others descended to find the cabin table set. There was a prodigious amount of fried steak and boiled potatoes as the main part of the meal. To their dismay they found the steak had been fried to death and was as tough as leather. A wail of sorrow arose when the potatoes proved to be so hard that Pauline doubted if they had been boiled more than three minutes.

The "pirate," whose table manners savored of the forecastle, tried a biscuit and found it as hard as stone and almost as heavy. In his anger he hurled it at the side of the cabin and was horrified to see it go through the boat's side. He did not know that the biscuit happened to strike a hole that had been temporarily stopped up with putty and paint. He turned speechless to the others and saw Hicks lift a biscuit on high about to dash it onto the cabin floor.

With instant presence of mind he seized the arm of Hicks, and in a hoarse voice shouted:

"Don't do that, you'll sink the ship. Look what mine did."

They all gazed in amazement at the ragged aperture in the side of the cabin through which the sparkling waters of the Atlantic could be seen dancing past. The sailor's surprise turned to indignation. He rose to his feet, thumped his fist against the carlines of the cabin and made a speech.

"Of all the crimes that has been did to the poor sailor man this is the worst. I've sailed before the mast near forty years and I've eaten some terrible grub. The worst stuff on earth is fed to sailors. I've seen pilot bread that you had to watch or it would walk off, 'salt horse' that made men turn on their officers and mutiny. I've lived on chop sueyed rats in Shanghai, fried spiders on the Pampas and swallowed infurorial earth with the Worton niggers. I've put down seal blubber without a kick and gnawed the tops off my boots in the Arctic ice, but dod rot my keelson if I ever hoisted anything the like of this into my face. I won't stand it. I mutiny."

Pauline quelled the mutiny by pointing out that this was his own expedition, and he couldn't very well mutiny against himself. His suggestion to murder the cook was also voted down and Pauline agreed to take charge of the cooking. Bread and butter, canned, boned chicken and sliced peaches served to appease their hunger before returning to the deck. Then in sepulchral tones they ordered Filipo to descend and eat what he had cooked.

Events moved swiftly that afternoon. Owen, peering in the galley port hole beheld the disguised cook remove his wig to wash his face and recognized the curly light hair of Harry. About four o'clock the launch tied up to the landing at the small village of St. Andrew. There Owen had opportunity to reveal his discovery of Harry's presence to the other two conspirators. They were frightened at first but soon agreed that it was a fine chance to get rid of both at the same time.

The pirate confided to them that he had brought a clock work bomb along and had it in his bag. A few minutes' discussion brought forth a simple plan.

Owen sent the disguised Harry with a bucket in search of a spring and Pauline was already hunting strange flowers among the palms and creepers. This left the conspirators free to place the bomb under the cabin floor boards, a matter which Owen attended to himself. It was set to explode two hours later. Pauline and Filipo were then summoned and told that there were comfortable lodgings and a good meal obtainable at a village just the other side of the long narrow point of land. If Pauline and Boyd and Filipo would go around in the launch Owen and Hicks would climb through the jungle and get there in time to have a meal all ready upon the boat's arrival. The two parties separated and all was quiet for some time. Pauline sat on deck with the pirate endeavoring to engage him in conversation. But he grew surlier and surlier in his answers, looking frequently at his watch and often stepping below for a drink.

After about an hour and three-quarters Pauline became a little frightened at his behavior and descended to the cabin. There was the cook reading a cook book evidently his own. The moment Pauline was out of sight the pirate heaved a sigh of relief and abandoned the wheel. Stepping softly to the stern he pulled in the small boat which was towing astern, leaped in adroitly and cut it adrift.

"Filipo," said Pauline, "you told us you were a good cook."

"Yes, senorita, I thought I was."

"Have you ever cooked before?"

"No, but I have a cook book which tells you how every one may be a cook. I thought ——"

Filipo did not finish his sentence. His eyes were roving around the cabin in search of something and Pauline was looking very hard at him.

"What's that ticking sound?" inquired the cook. He went to the cabin clock and listened. No, it wasn't that. Pauline could hear it, too, and it wasn't her tiny watch. Filipo made a search of the cabin and finally located the sound under the floor. A moment more and he had laid bare the pirate's bomb. He leaped on deck and took in at a glance that the pirate had left in the only boat.

In another instant he was below again, tearing off his wig.

"Polly, it's I. There's an infernal machine ticking here ready to blow us up."

He tried to lift up the bomb but it was wedged fast.

"Harry, for Heaven's sake, what do you mean?"

"I'll tell you in a minute in the water as soon as we have jumped overboard. Come."

He seized Pauline, carried her up on deck.

"Where's Mr. Boyd?"

"Gone. Take this," answered Harry, putting a life preserver around her.

"Now, will you jump or shall I throw you overboard? One, two, three."

"I'll jump," said Pauline and with arms around each other they leaped into the warm ocean. On went the white launch serene and unruffled by the desertion of its crew. In answer to Pauline's demand for explanation Harry only answered:

"Wait."

Finally it came.

A [illegible]elch of flame shot up from the launch driving a column of smoke far into the sky, where it spread out and formed a [illegible] ring, which floated and curled for many moments. A concussion reached them through the water and another in the air smote their ears.

The after part of the launch rode on the waters for a moment and then disappeared. Finally a succession of waves tossed them and passed on "What does it mean?" gasped the girl.

"Insanity—sheer, downright insanity. That wretch of a "pirate" was a crazy man. He placed that bomb, intending to kill all of us. And Owen deserves a sound thrashing for having anything to do with such a murderous lunatic."

"I think you're rather hard, on Owen, Harry," said Pauline. "Of course, we all know that pirates aren't nice persons—but nobody could forsee that the man was crazy."

"Well, perhaps. But don't talk, we [illegible] and a half swim to shore."

They were spared that ordeal by the Silurian Liner Caradoc. Arrayed in borrowed clothes they were notified of a second rescue and came out on deck in time to behold in the dusk of evening the "pirate." He was relating to an admiring throng how he had stuck by the burning ship till it exploded. He had actually been blown into the air and had fallen by good luck into the little boat.

Suddenly the Hidden Bomb Explodes and Shatters the Yacht to Splinters.

"It's a lie," said Harry in the old man's cackling voice. The "pirate" heard the voice of the old man and saw the face and the blonde hair of Harry.

It was too much for his evil and murderous mind to bear. With a shriek he hurled himself over the rail into the sea. The Caradoc stopped and searched, but no trace of the "pirate" could be found.

Winners of the "What Was the Old Man's Warning?" Prizes

WHAT did the old man say? When Harry Marvin, disguised as an aged and feeble old man, stood before Pauline and, shaking his finger at the Pirate, muttered a message—WHAT WAS THE OLD MAN'S WARNING?

In this week's $1,000 competition all were agreed that the Pirate was a rascal. Nobody felt called upon to show any charity for him. Not a kind word was spoken of him. By common agreement of everybody in the competition the Pirate was a scoundrel, of course. But it was interesting to the judges to observe the various words and phrases used in charactegizing his villainy. Some were contented with the vague statement that he was a very wicked man, others called him a monster, others a murderer

But, in revealing the warning given by the old man, there were many competitors who searched their brains and their vocabulary for words to give the Pirate a fitting denunciation. One wrote that he was a grave-robber, another called him a cannibal, a poisoner, a white-slave. Several said he was an escaped luntic, a kidnapper, and many declared he was an ex-convict.

A very original letter was this:

"Harry, disguised as an old man, recognizes the pirate as a kidnapper and murderer, who abducted him when he was a child, holding him for fifty thousand dollars' ($50,000) ransom for seven years. While the authorities are working on the case, Harry's parents mourn the absence of their only child and adopt Pauline. Fortunately, Harry is rescued by the police, and his abductor is sent to prison for a number of years. Having served his term in prison, the 'pirate' vows he will wreak vengeance on Stanford Marvin or his family. Harry tells Pauline who the supposed 'pirate' is without disclosing his identity, and warns her to be on her guard while travelling with him or she would not be wanting of adventures or thrills, if she escaped with her life at all."

This letter accuses the Pirate of having been convicted as a murderer, and suggests that he is worse than the wild natives of the jungle:

"This wonderfully brave old rascal is so anxious to pour into your willing ears his incredible tales of murder as a 'pirate,' why does he not tell you of at least one truthful exploit as a murderer? Ask him if he ever knew Gabriel Flynn. Ask him if he ever shot an innocent man in the back. Ask him how many years he has spent behind the prison bars. Young lady, when you seek for legitimate adventure it had better be with the wild beasts of the tropic jungle—the cruel black men of central America—or the brown savages of South America, than in the refined company of such reformed 'pirates' as this one, who seems better acquainted with his schooners of liquor than with those of the sea."

This warning from the old man took a poetical form:

"Beware, my child; of the pirate's tales,
When he talks of murder and fearful gales
His aim is to make you think them true,
But if you believed, it would never do;
He might take you to a barren isle,
And there he might dig for a treasured pile,
And alone you'd go where you are led,
For the rest would go home and say you're dead.
Your money they'd steal, your life they'd spoil.
So beware of the pirate's tales, my girl."

Here is an interesting but fanciful idea:

"Lady, by one who knows and escaped unharmed, I have been sent to you.

"Beware of this pirate. His villany is without parallel. Yet, steeped as his soul is in crime, he belong to a religious sect whose creed demands a priestess for every full moon. Their homes is an island fabled by hidden treasure. Large ships dare not approach the island, because of dangerous, obscure coral reefs, and 'tis said that no vessel, however great or small, once anchored near its shores, is ever heard from or seen again. Unless a pirate signal is given all crafts are destroyed by an unseen force operated under the water.

"Oh, lady beware. Beautiful girls are lured to this island and held there—slaves to these pirates, and each lovely prize in her turn must await the full of the moon, when she is crowned queen of the island and worshipped as a priestess until the full of the next moon, at which time another poor victim ascends the throne and the dethroned priestess becomes the common property of the island and its inhabitants. Despairing they live—despairing DIE.

"BEWARE, ERE IT IS TOO LATE."

This suggestion displays considerable ingenuity:

"I am Professor Dubret, the hypnotizer. Wednesday this liar came upon the stage with a cynical sneer upon his face. After he had succumbed to my power and while the audience was being amused by his antics, I felt a sudden craving for whiskey. I never drink, so I realized that my mind, in entering his body, had interlocked with his. A beautiful scene flashed before me. A maiden, her gloden hair waving in the morning breeze, stood upon a cliff overlooking the sea. The rising sun, throwing a golden bar across the sea to the cliff, seemed to proclaim peace, while the rumble and roar of the breakers below told of incessant battle between rock and wave. A man appeared. He clutched her and threw her into the sea. He grinned and drank from a flash as her body sank, while from a treetop nearby came the song of a bird.

"After he had left the stage I was seized with the idea that I had read a murderous plot existing in this man's mind. I recognize him now in spite of his changed appearance. That liar is not a pirate. Beware of him! He intends to murder you!"

TODAY'S PRIZE OFFER

As you read this instalment of "The Perils of Pauline," printed above on this page today, you noticed that soon after Harry staggered out of the cabin of the yacht he addressed some hurried words to Pauline—WHAT DID HARRY SAY TO PAULINE?

The words Harry uttered have not yet been written. That will be YOUR task. Read the instalments, study the situations, and write the "message" that you think best fits those situations.

One thousand dollars in money prizes will be given for the best explanation of what Harry said. Answers must reach this office not later than next Wednesday noon. Announcement of winners will be made two weeks from today.

Awards will be made according to the merits of the replies received, and those showing the greatest excellence in ingenuity, imagination, inventiveness and literary skill will be ranked in the order of merit.

This contest is open to every one without restriction, and those who in our opinion send in the best answers in not more than 200 words will be awarded the prizes. No manuscripts will be returned.

Write your explanation in not over 200 words, write your name and address plainly, and send it to

WRITES OF Life Hereafter

Answering Query of Writer on Immortality of Robert Pyne, Author Says Life Has No Beginning, Therefore Can Have No Ending

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1914, by American-Journal-Examiner

A STRANGER sends me a little booklet, artistically printed, to the memory of Robert Pyne, of Hartford, Conn., a veteran of the Civil War and a man beloved by all his friends. A Socialist and an editor.

He passed on in May, 1913, after living in this body since March, 1844. M. J. Connelly wrote some verses about the passing of Robert Pyne, and one verse ended with this line:

"NOW THINE THE SLEEP THAT KNOWS NO END."

The correspondent who sends the memorial booklet asks for comment on this line.

He does not believe in "the sleep that knows no end."

He believes so good a man as Mr. Pyne will awaken and live again in other realms of consciousness.

Another friend of Mr. Pyne said of him:

"What more can I say of our friend, Robert Pyne, than that his highest philosophy taught, as its chiefest virtues, kindliness and thoughtfulness.

"And the man who embodies and lives in his every day life such philosophy is sorely missed and mourned.

"This was the QUALITY of life that Robert Pyne lived.

"We have known him to exemplify it in a thousand ways. While he hated injustice and knew well how to denounce it, yet he had pity for the doer of injustice. This because of the law of his nature and the true vision he had of the causes at work in society making and transforming men into abnormal and immoral things.

His Life Signified the Possibilities That Lie Undeveloped

"And with their chief end, it would [illegible] as a tireless competition one with the other for a mere chance to live.

"There is a reason in the heart of our sorrow.

"For myself [illegible] life signified the possibilities [illegible] undeveloped, but potent [illegible]

"And inasmuch as our friend typified this potential goodness of our race, there must be no despairing or ceasing in the effort to change those material conditions, now existing in human relations that cause our friend to stand somewhat as an exception, whereas if human environment were right he would but epitomize the majority of the race. For the heart of the human family is desirous of good.

"Kindly in essence and desirous of loving and being loved, if only it might do this without fear.

"But the strife of life—the fight of life—which is the fight of brother against brother for opportunity to live, is no atmosphere in which to grow and foster love, or loving beings. The wonder is that even a few such win to the top.

"Such a man was Robert Pyne—a sign and symbol of the character that all the children of men will yet become. Forgetful of self—loving his fellows—fighting for the weaker side—inciting us and shaming us. He has won to immortality in the hearts of his friends.

"ROBERT A. McJUNKIN."

Surely such a man, who passed suddenly out of the body as a result of an accident, did not as suddenly fall into a "sleep that knows no waking."

Those who have made a deep and profound study of these matters, men such as Sir Oliver Lodge, Flammarion and others of equal brilliancy in other lines of development, believe that even animals do not become extinct through the process of death.

Animals and birds and all created things with affections, continue to live for some period of time at least in the realm which lies close to earth.

All human beings pass through that realm; and those who are quite on the animal plane linger there for a long period; because they have not developed the higher consciousness which enables them to rise to higher heavens.

But such a man as Mr. Pyne must have found his stay in this first plane a very brief one, because all his thoughts and feelings and desires were for the highest things.

He Erected a Mansion for Himself in Spiritual Realms

And by such continual thoughts and actions he made a mansion for himself in the Spiritual Realms, where he will reside and where he will be given beautiful, helpful work to do until such time as he will be called upon to reincarnate and come back to earth.

It is quite possible that, passing suddenly from his body, as he did, Mr. Pyne was some little time in finding out the fact that he was no longer mortal. He had made for himself, undoubtedly, a high spiritual atmosphere. And he would find himself in a similar one when out of the body.

But to such a spirit as his beautiful guides would soon come and conduct him to the mansion he had fashioned for himself by his thoughts and words and deeds while on earth, and he would be given rest, and peace, and joy, until his active, unselfish spirit called for work.

It is more than probable that he would ask to be given work here on earth; to come back from time to time and cheer and spur and inspire those who were dear to him, and to help in the great work for humanity so close to his heart.

Very unselfish souls are given this employment sometimes, but it is not meant that those on earth should know the details of the methods employed by the spirit friends, for invariably such knowledge would bring a lack of personal endeavor on our part.

If the scholar knows the older pupil or teacher is to give him the answer to his problem he is not [illegible] to work it out through [illegible] of study.

Our Life Has No Beginning, and Neither Has It Any Ending

All [illegible] pupil or scholar or [illegible] ed to do is to spur [illegible] And if [illegible] to grow utterly [illegible] or confused, [illegible] of the right answer to the problem is whispered to him.

So our Spirit Guides, who come back at times to help us, whisper to us, but not too audibly, lest we ask for more information and help than would be well for us to receive.

Quite po[illegible] to [illegible] unquestionable [illegible] of Robert Pyne [illegible] and then

"NO, there [illegible] sleep that knows no end."

Life had no beginning, and it has no end.

Peanut Politics and Progress
By ELBERT HUBBARD

ANYTHING or anybody who is in advance of the spirit of the times is going to be persecuted.

The martyrs of old—say, Savonarola, Huss, Wyclif, Ridley, Latimer and Tyndale—were all men who voiced things that were new to many, and which, of course, they could not comprehend.

Now, the doctrines for which these men stood have come to be merely commonplace truisms.

Ralph Waldo Emerson was once regarded as a heretic. His utterances cost him the good will of his Alma Mater for thirty years, and he was practically put out of his denomination; but now preachers of every creed quote Emerson without apology, and use his utterances as texts.

The suspicion is abroad that big business in America has gone forward faster than have the doctors, preachers, lawyers and politicians. Thus, big business has come in opposition to the popular ideals, and, necessarily, has had to suffer.

Big business thinks in millions, whereas the majority of us limit ourselves to thousands at the most.

Go into any drug store and ask for an article that is sold in two sizes, ten and twenty-five cents, and nine times out of ten your merry drug clerk will hand out the ten-cent size—simply because he is a ten-cent man. He thinks with the dime as a unit of measurement.

In East Aurora there used to be a man who had a peanut stand at the railroad station. One day a fellow from Chicago came along and said to the peanut party: "Why do you not expand your business, take on a side line? In fact, why do you not carry popcorn?".

The peanut man put in popcorn, and as a result got nervous prostration.

The trouble was that he was strictly a peanut-man.

In America we have a great many peanut politicians.

Big business has improved the quality and bettered the service of everything it has touched.

Big business does things that no partnership and no corporation can possibly accomplish.

Partnerships are made up of several individuals working together for a common end.

Corporations are made up of individuals, with a provision that in case of death some one else shall take up the work of the individual who drops out and carry it on. Thus we have a body without death, a mind without decline. The corporation is organized to carry out a work that no man or set of individuals can accomplish in a lifetime.

The trust is a partnership of corporations, and has been evolved out of the necessities of the time.

Progress does not consist in going backward.

If men in big business are guilty of extortion or coercion, punish them. But do not burn the barn to kill the mice.

The thing to do is to accept these big combinations, and then see that they are properly supervised, but the supervision must not be by demagogues and politicians. The work must be done by big, sympathetic men who are economists by experience and who have brain capacity, plus.

These are times of transition, and it is well for us to exercise patience and bring our good nature to bear.

The country is safe when the people are employed; but when the breadline forms mankind easily slides off into a mob.

Business is organization, and there is nothing so civilized as the payroll. The demagogues who would lynch a payroll in order to punish somebody are inviting commercial disaster and national discredit.

SMALL WAGES
By DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST

By Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst.

THE following is a simple, straighforward letter written by a young woman who knows a good deal about the stress of life, and although intended only for the eye of the person to whom it was addressed, contains two or three points that make it worth reproducing here.

"I saw 'Within the Law,' and I want every penny I give to be used to keep girls straight. It is for the strongest to keep their feet; but the weaker will surely go to the wall without help. I hope God will prosper me this year, so I can help. One thing I do. I never employ girls at starvation wages. I had to have a girl in January and I paid her $18 and overtime after 6. She had her good, hot lunches here in the office, and while the work was very hard, she went home every night quite contented and happy. Now there is a temporary slack; but the minute I can I shall put on another girl at $18. I went into —— from the play and the tragedy of it all shortened my shopping and drove me out into the rainswept streets for relief."

The letter breathes a spirit of refined and Christian socialism. We are not simply members of society, but members in particular of each other. Eloquently exploiting the idea of brotherhood and sisterhood is a very cheap thing compared with being an actual brother or sister to a brother or sister that is in distress.

It is to the world's advantage that we are classed into differing conditions in matters of money and convenience. Poorer people afford to those more comfortably conditioned, opportunity to have their hearts enlarged by the helpful service they render, while if such service is rendered in a spirit truly fraternal it helps not only to ease but to sweeten and ennoble the life of the recipient.

The writer of the letter was blest in her giving as well as was her employe blest in the receiving. It is all a mistake to suppose that it is one of the world's imperfections that we are graded at different levels in respect to either our mental or material condition.

Inequality of levels is what promotes the circulation of the world's blood just as the water in the big lakes on our Northern frontier is kept flowing because each of them, from east to west, has a basin far enough below its western neighbor to get the fulness of what that neighbor contains and supplies.

The letter is, by the way, a fine tribute to the play, "Within the Law," which is playing at the Majestic. It is sometimes said that the drama is so essentially unreal that it is incapable of producing practical and permanent results in the characters and actions of spectators, and that the tears which we shed before the curtain come from so near the surface and the sympathies which are excited lie so little way beneath the heart's cuticle that it is all like a light Summer shower which only leaves a glisten on the grass, but puts no moisture at its roots. That is not always so.

There are plays—and "Within the Law" is one of them—that are as good as a sermon, and better, because they speak not only the same truth as the pulpit, but throw the truth into a dramatic shape that gives to it a glowing reality often impossible to a message that is only spoken and not acted.

As a third feature of the letter is to be mentioned the fact that while, in these straightened times, and with the streets literally flooded with stenographers and typewriters waiting for a job, such an employe could probably have been secured for $12 or $15 competent to do all that would be required of her, this one was paid $18 because she was worth it and because she needed as much as that to enable her to live respectable and comfortably.

There is a great deal of difference, so far as the effect upon the employe is concerned, between paying her $18 and paying her $15, with an added present of $1 at the end of the week to keep her feeling good natured.

Eking out inadequate salaries with an occasional tip does not even up the transaction to the level of just and honorable treatment. There is nothing in the arrangement made with the girl that savors of the doctrine of supply and demand.

There was nothing in it that involved a quotation from market rates.

The girl earned $18, and it would, therefore, have been fraud to pay her less, no matter if there had been a hundred girls waiting around willing to do the work for less.

The girl needed $18 to be able to live decently and comfortably, and to have paid her less would have been to foster indecency and to make capital out of the employe's discomfort.

Such doctrine as this is simple and altogether elementary to the minds of all who are disposed to shape their transactions in a way to meet the requirements of justice rather than the impulse of self-interest.

WHY SHOULD ONE READ POETRY?
By Amy Lowell,
Sister of President Lowell of Harvard and Author of Several Volumes of Poems

I HAVE been asked to write a few lines in answer to the question: Why should one read poetry? That seems to me a good deal like asking: Why should one eat? One eats because one has to, to support life, but every time one sits down to dinner one does not say, "I must eat this meal so that I may not die." On the contrary we eat because we are hungry, and so eating appears to us as a pleasant and desirable thing to do.

The necessity for poetry is one of the most fundamental traits of the human race. But naturally we do not take that into account, any more than we take into account that dinner and the next day again, dinner, is the condition of our remaining alive. Without poetry the soul and heart of man starves and [illegible] The only difference between them is that all men know, if they turn their minds to it, that without food they would die, and comparatively few people know that without poetry they would die.

When trying to explain anything I usually find that the Bible, that great collection of magnificent and inspired poetry, has said it before in the best possible way. Now the Bible says that "Man shall not live by bread alone." Which, in modern words, means—cannot live on the purely material things. It is true he cannot, and he never does. If he could, every book-shop would shut, every theatre would close its doors, every florist and picture dealer would go out of business, even the baseball grounds would close. For what is baseball but a superb epic of man's swiftness and strength, and his putting forth the utmost of the sobriety and vigor that is in him in an ecstasy of vi[illegible] And the men [illegible] which are carried away by [illegible] out of themselves and [illegible] of their daily lives, into [illegible] with physical [illegible] object that they [illegible] this way. Of course they don't. If they did they would be poets, and most men are not poets. But it is really what stirs them, for without it, throwing a little ball about a field and trying to hit it with a narrow stick isn't really very interesting. A baseball game is a sort of moving picture of what Homer wrote in his Iliad. I do not believe there is a boy in America who would not like Butcher and Lang's translation of the Iliad, if no one had ever told him it was a school-book.

That is what poetry really is. It is the height and quintessence of emotion, of every sort of emotion. But it is always somebody feeling something at white heat, and it is as vital as the description of a battle would be, told by a soldier who had been in it.

I do not wish to be misunderstood. I do not mean that every book, or every play, contains this true poetry. Many, most alas! are poor imitations, some are merely sordid and vulgar. But books and plays exist because man is groping for a life beyond himself, for a beauty he needs, and is seeking to find. And the books and plays which live are those which satisfy this need.

Somebody once said to me that to make goodness dull was a great crime. In poetry, those men who have written without original and vital feeling, without a flaming imagination, have much to answer for. It is owing to them that poetry has come to mean a stupid and insipid sort of stuff, quite remote from people's lives, fit only for sentimental youth and nodding old age. That sort of poetry is what is technically called "derivative," which means that the author copies some one else's emotion, often some one else's words, and commonplace verses are written about flowers, and moonlight, and love, and death by people who would never be moved by any of these things if sincere poets had not been writing about them from the beginning of the world. People who like to hear the things they are used to, [illegible] say, "That is beautiful poetry," simple, straightforward people say. "Perhaps it is. But I don't care for poetry." But once in a while there comes along a man with knowledge and courage enough to say that it is not poetry at all, but is mere bosh!"

Again I do not mean that all poetry can be enjoyed by everybody. People have different tastes and different trainings. A man at forty seldom cares for the books which delighted him as a boy. People stop developing at all ages. Some men never mature beyond their 'teens, others go on growing and changing until old age. Because B. likes a book is no reason why A. should. And we are the inheritors of so splendid a literature that there are plenty of books for everybody. Many people enjoy Kipling's poems who would be confused by Keats, others delight in Burns who would be utterly without sympathy for Blake. The people who like Tennyson do not, as a rule, care much about Walt Whitman, and the admirers of Poe and Coleridge may find Wordsworth unattractive, and again his disciples might feel antagonized by Rossetti and Swinburne. It does not matter, so long as one finds one's own sustenance. Only, the happy men who can enjoy them all are the richest.

The true test of poetry is sincerity and vitality. It is not rhyme, or metre, or subject. It is nothing in the world but the soul of man as it really is.

Carlyle's "French Revolution" is a great epic poem, so is Trevelyan's three volumes on "Garibaldi and the Italian War of Independence." That they are written in prose has nothing to do with the matter. That most poems are written rhythmically, and that rhythm has come to be the great technical fact of poetry, was, primarily, because men under stress of emotion tend to talk in a rhythmed speech. Read Lincoln's "Address at Gettysburg" and "Second Inaugural," and you will see.

Nothing is more foolish than to say that only such and such forms are proper to poetry. Every form is proper to poetry, so long as it is the sincere expression of a man's thought. That insincere men try bizarre forms of verse to gain personal notoriety is true, but it seems not very difficult to distinguish them from the real artists. And so long as men feel, and think, and have the need of expressing themselves, so long will their modes of expression change. For expression tends to become hackneyed and devitalized, and new methods must be found for keeping the sense of palpitant vigor.

There are signs that we are living at the beginning of a great poetic renaissance. Only three weeks ago The New York Times printed some remarks of Mr. Brett, the head of The Macmillan Company, in which he said that poetry was pushing itself into the best seller class. And the other day a London publisher, Mr. Heinneman, announced that he should not publish so many novels, as they were a drug on the market. England has several magazines devoted exclusively to poetry and poetic drama. Masefield is paid enormous sums for his work, and a little book entitled "The Georgian Book of Poetry," containing the work of some of the younger men, which has been out barely two years, is already in its ninth edition. Here, in America, we have "The Poetry Journal," published in Boston, and "Poetry," published in Chicago. England counts among her poets, W. B. Yeats, Robert Bridges, John Masefield, Wilfred Wilson Gibson, D. H. Lawrence, F. L. Flint, James Stevens, Rudyard Kipling, and, although on a somewhat more popular level, Alfred Noyes. England also boasts, as partly her own, the Bengal poet, Rabindranath Tagore, who has just been awarded the Nobel prize; and Ezra Pound, who, although an American by birth and happily therefore ours to claim, lives in London. In America we have Josephine Preston Peabody, Bliss Carman, Edwin Arlington Robinson, Anna Hempstead Branch, Hermann Hagedorn, Grace Fallow Norton, Fanny Stearns Davis, and Nicholas Vachel Lindsay. These lists represent poets with many differing thoughts and modes of thought, but they point to the great vitality of poetry at the moment.

Have I answered the question? I think I have. We should read poetry because only in that way can we know man in all his moods, in the most beautiful thoughts of his heart, in his farthest reaches of imagination, in the tenderness of his love, in the nakedness and awe of his soul confronted with the terror and wonder of the universe.

Poetry and history are the textbooks to the heart of man, and poetry is at once the most intimate and the most enduring.

"The Charge Is One of Heaviest of Civilized Animal's Burdens," According to a Speaker at the Berne Conference

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

AN interesting token of the spirit of our times is the recent international conference held at Berne, Switzerland, to consider what should be done in order to preserve the wild races of the globe from the murderous propensities of the only self-styled civilized animal which at present dwells upon its surface.

One branding sentence uttered by Paul Sarasin at that conference smarts and stings in the reader's conscience:

"It is only too true," said Mr. Sarasin, "that the white man is the great DESTROYER of creation! He is the kill-joy in the paradise of the earth, and wherever he goes his path is marked by epidemics, poison, devastation, blood and tears!"

The civilized white man not only kills lower animals for the pleasure of seeing them fall and die; but, directly or indirectly, swiftly or slowly, he kills all representatives of his own kind whose ways of life are less artificial than his own. He sacrifices every creature to his two great gods—machinery and luxury.

Fortunately there is a leaven of righteousness in his composition, the working of which is shown by the Berne conference.

The resolution of the conference concern the protection of all kinds of wild life, including plants as well as animals, and savage races of men are not excluded from its sympathetic good will.

But a particular effort was made to throw a shield over the birds. How necessary such protection has become is indicated by the terrible slaughter of all winged creatures that goes on every year with increasing recklessness. I am writing this from France, where the "chasse," that is the hunting season, has been just closed by law only to reopen next year.

Now, according to my observations, the "chasse" usually means little else than bird killing. Boars, deer and wild rabbits still exist in certain large forest tracts and on private estates kept out of cultivation for the sake of furnishing sport to their proprietors and their fashionable friends, but the average "bourgeois," or plain citizen, who in imitation of the "nobles" puts on his shining leather hunting coat, his yellow leather leggins and his glazed hunting cap, and jauntily tucks his double-barreled gun under his arm, to the gaping admiration of his less prosperous but more usefully occupied neigbors, seldom finds anything to exercise his markmanship upon other than the birds of the fields and hedges, many of which are either native songsters or passengers from more northern climes trustfully making their way sunward for the Winter. Anything that chirps, or has wings and feathers, is "game" for these bold hunters.

Night and morning, during the season of the "chasse," they may be seen in small companies at the country hotels, strutting about in war paint, attracting a degree of attention from chambermaids and waitresses only second to that commanded by the wearers of army uniforms, and drinking success to their murderous incursions into the fields.

They go out at sunrise with the appearance of men called upon to defend their country from invasion and they return at noon or night with a pitiful bagful of poor, broken-winged birds, whose little heads hanging from their slender necks are not as large as your thumb.

A month ago I visited a country estate where the proprietor left me to wander about at will. I climbed a pyramidal hill encircled by his vineyards, and near the top found myself in a wilderness of dwarf beech trees, not averaging more than five feet high, forming a thicket that was penetrated at regular intervals by narrow paths. While I was wondering what this place could be, I noticed that there were many little wire circles suspended in the branches about me, with a fuzz of loose and exceedingly fine wire threads partly filling them. I could not imagine what they were for until the proprietor, coming to look me up, seemed amused at my perplexity.

"I'll show you what they are for," he said.

He stepped into one of the narrow paths, stooped down, showed me one of the circles set on the ground across a narrow gap in the thicket, and there caught in the cruel web of wires as fine as heairs and sharp as needles, was a beautiful thrush, with its head hanging on its bosom, but not yet dead.

He pointed out the victim with gloating look of satisfaction that made me sick at heart, and then wrung its neck and put it in his pocket. This whole thicket, covering perhaps an acre of ground, was constructed solely as a lure for thrushes, and filled with hundreds of those devilish traps! The proprietor thought it was great "sport." In that way he slaughtered hundreds of birds. It is no excuse that he eats some of them for it takes more than his table can consume, and I know by the look I saw in his eye that it is a greater pleasure to him to find a thrush in one of his death traps than to eat it afterward. There is need for many Berne conferences.

Caring for the Immigrant

By PROF. DIXON RYN FOX.
Lecturer in Politics, Columbia University.

THE question of the unemployed, unskilled immigrant has become one of this country's greatest problems.

During the past year 1,200,000 immigrants came through our ports. It is an invasion silent and unnoticed. The average American has no idea of it.

A national plan of distribution is plainly the only guarantee of economic assimilation of those who are allowed to come. Our present policy seems to be toward systematic restriction. But a careful plan of distribution should not be thought of as a substitute for, but rather a corollary of a wise selection in admission.

Eighty per cent. of our immigration represents farm laborers or else unskilled laborers. Ignorant that agriculture in this country means something very different from abroad, they choose to try the city where they reason life must be richer than under conditions they remember so unhappily. They dread to leave the colonies in these Eastern cities, where they are spared the pain of learning a new language and new manners.

Thus the alien population of the city grows, a labor surplus forms, the sweatshop feeds fungus-like upon human wretchedness, men search anxiously for work, but find it not, or, if successful, crowd out others who take up the same despairing role.

We have come to realize that the adopted son of the United States cannot become a citizen of the republic merely through the miracle of a document and seal, but that consecrated and painstaking effort must be expended with a generous zeal before he can really enter into the fellowship of what has been a nation of idealism.

We cannot expect him to study seriously how best to serve his country until he has some assurance of the continued existence of himself and family.

The government of no civilized country of the Western World has been less ready than our own to interest itself in the economic welfare of its able-bodied citizens.

It will be practicable some day, I think, for the government to assume complete charge of the immigrant, say, two days after his arrival, giving him trustworthy information as to the opportunity of this land of his adoption.

Such extension of our present efforts in the immigrant's behalf would be effective tactics in the war on poverty this age has undertaken.

When the army got orders to move on to Mexico it proved, as had the navy, that it was prepared for a fight or a frolic. Thousands viewed the stirring scenes in Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Galveston. There were many affecting scenes as the warriors bade sweethearts, wives and parents good-by, all expecting a long war. Among the men of wealth who are ready for war is Cornelius Vanderbilt of the famous family. As an officer of the guard, he was prepared to join in the defence of the flag.

THE DARK ROMANCE OF THE CAESARS

Written by GUGLIELMO FERRERO, the Greatest Historian of the Present Age

BLACK with the passions of their age, the calumnies of disagreeing historians and the murk of time, the names of the Caesars have come down to us—black; but truth will out. Modern study and interpretation have searched out the facts and legends to show us how much brighter are those old names than they are painted, how much more of good was in them and how much of the human—making them less like monsters of myth and more like men, whom we may study for the reading of our present times. Guglielmo Ferrero is the greatest historian of the present; he has spent a lifetime upon the ancient Roman civilization which, by comparison he has linked to our own rapidly changing epoch, with most brilliant and interesting results. It is this modern approach that makes this article which is reprinted from Hearst's Magazine today so vital and entertaining. This is the first of a series of articles from him which will appear in Hearst's Magazine.

By GUGLIELMO FERRERO

Author of "Women of the Caesars"; "Between Two Worlds"; "America and Europe Compared."

IN HEARST'S MAGAZINE FOR MAY.

ALL history contains no blacker chapter than the story of the Caesars. About the sinister figures of the five protagonists a host of secondary but not less terrible figures crowd—corrupt and poison-giving women, dissolute and murderous youths, disloyal friends, venal senators, flatterers and accusers of every degree and quality. Demons in an inferno of base and ignoble passions—such, in the pages of the ancient historians and in the minds of posterity to this day, appear the Caesars from Augustus to Nero

And yet, especially during the last century, doubts have gradually arisen in the minds of some of those who have undertaken for the hundredth time to rewrite the unforgetable story. Scholars began to note contradictions and incongruities in the accounts of Tacitus and Suetonius and Dion Cassius, the three great sources of the history of the Caesars. When subjected to careful scrutiny, stories that had been accepted as facts for centuries became manifestly improbable. Beginning with Augustus, scholars began to verify, compare, criticise. Did Augustus really spend his long life in play-acting before an ignorant public? Or did his far-famed policies rest on a vaster and more substantial design than the astute mystification of mankind? Was it possible that all his acts and speeches had been misinterpreted like those last words which at the moment of his death he addressed to posterity—fabula acta est—The Comedy is finished" For centuries, historians interpreted those words as a death-bed confession from Augustus that his life had been a mask played at the expense of Roman liberties.

But one day a German scholar proved that the philosophers, and especially the Stoics, habitually compared life, not to a comedy, but to grave and tragic drama with its beginning, development and end. In fabula acta est Augustus spoke as a Stoic. The drama of his life was done—the grave, tragic drama, filled with sorrow and disappointed hopes—not the farce-comedy meant to beguile mankind.

Augustus was the first of the line to profit by this reversal, this about-face of history. While differing in their estimate of his natural abilities and public purposes, the historians of the last century—almost without exception—have praised his works and striven to show that his transgressions and imputed defects were trifling compared with the benefits that accrued to the empire from his policies. Augustus, it is true, had been less ill-used by tradition than his successors. But criticism soon directed its scrutiny to them also.

Tiberius came first. Was he indeed the terrible tyrant whom Tacitus depicts in such very malign colors. Scholars began presently to find in the writings of the very authors who had most defamed Tiberius visible traces of an historical tradition that represented him as a most valiant general, a firm and just emperor, a sagacious and economical administrator. They observed that many facts related by Tacitus confirmed this tradition, and that others, which in Tacitus appeared obscure, were marvelously cleared up by the light it threw upon them. They recognized that many of the gravest charges brought by Suetonius and Tacitus were self-contradictory; and that in other cases—as the horrors of his stay in Capri—it was in order to inquire how these historians, after the lapse of so many years, had been able to get such circumstantial, minute and precise information about things and acts which even if they were true must have happened under cover of the greatest and most profound secrecy. They began to ask if Velleius might not possibly be nearer to the truth than Tacitus

Velleius was a Roman official who served Tiberius in the capacity of what we should call an aide-de-camp—was, therefore, personally acquainted with him. And Velleius wrote a short story in which he portrays and exalts Tiberius as a great and wise emperor. For this singular hardihood the followers of Tacitus have poured bitter abuse upon him. In the history of Roman literature, Velleius has stood out as the most shameless of flatterers. It is only since the historians have begun to change their opinion of Tiberius that they have begun to see Velleius in a different light.

Together with Tiberius, Claudius has fared better during the past century. While recognizing that he was a bizarre and singular individual, full of frailties and aberrations, a strange mixture of virtues and defects; while not denying that he lacked certain of the qualities of the statesman and especially that mysterious force that commands respect; the historians have yet been compelled to recognize that Claudius was not the inept imbecile it was pleasing to Tacitus and Suetonius to make him out. Many and important achievements were effected under his rule, not the least of which was the conquest of Britain No doubt, credit for the great achievements of his administration must go in part to his freedmen; but in part they belong purely to Claudius, who directly conceived certain undertakings and reforms, and grasped and seconded others that were conceived by his freedmen

Finally, even Nero has found in contemporary history, if not a complete and thoroughgoing rehabilitation, at least a modification of the severe and terrible judgment that has stood against him. That he was vicious, criminal, dissolute, there is no doubt. Moreover, it is certain that he procured the assassination of his own mother. But he was not the violent and ferocious tyrant described by Tacitus and Suetonius, even though he kept the weakest of hands on the helm of state, abandoning public affairs to the mercy of chance and letting the government go to pieces. He was a weak, corrupt prodigal, hungry for pleasure and luxury, shy of serious work and all grave responsibility, bent on enjoying the supreme magistracy of the empire as if it were a holiday.

Of all the Caesars, the one concerning whom the judgment of posterity has changed the least is Caligula. Caligula is adjudged a madman by modern historians as he was by the ancient writers. This point can no longer be called in doubt or put in dispute. Nevertheless, I do not think it impossible to explain his insanity in such a way that something more will appear in them than the monstrous caprices of a delirious imagination, the morbid exaggerations of an unbalanced mind.

The history of the Caesars, then, as it still lives in the memory of mankind, is according to modern historical research a great popular legend. The Tiberius and Nero of whom the public think and speak prove to be half mythological and fantastic creatures like the paladins of Charles the Great in the poems of medieval chivalry. So that a question naturally arises at this point: If this story which so many centuries have repeated as fact is indeed a legend, how was the legend born and how did it come to take its present form?

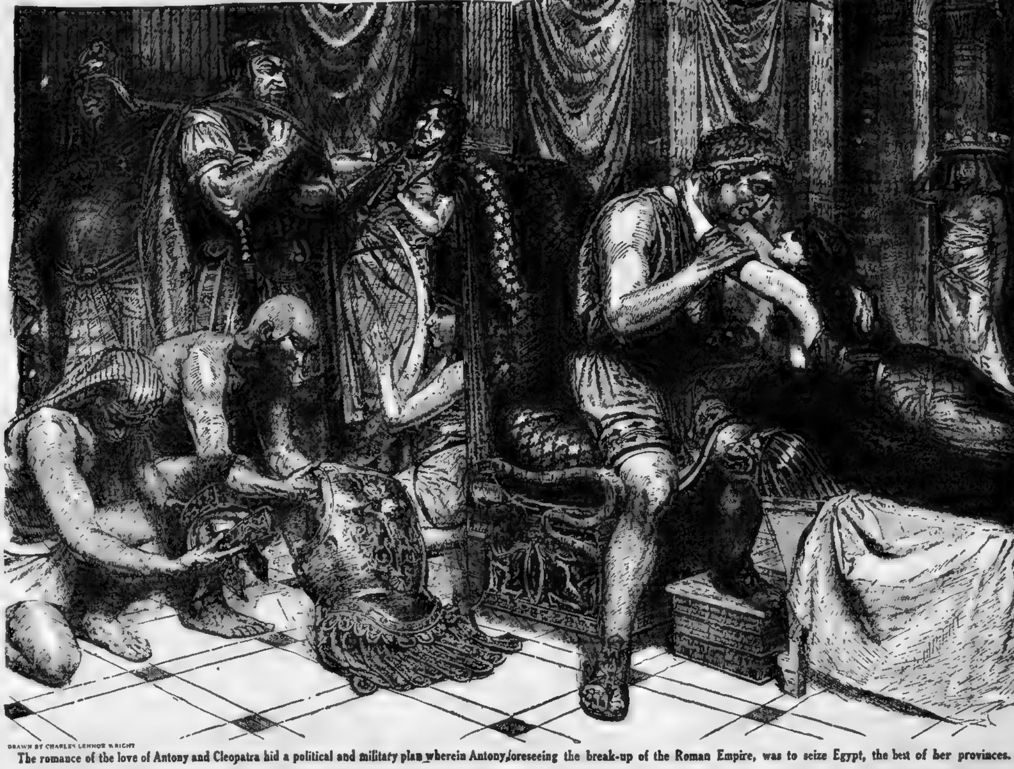
The question is fair enough, but the answer is neither simple nor easy. And first of all it is fitting to note that there is no ground for believing that this legend arose in the midst of universal history like a solitary island in the midst of the sea. Almost all great historical characters appear to the eyes of posterity magnified or reduced, glorified or obscured by the admiration or the hatred that followed them to the tomb. For this reason all of them are in part at least legendary. It is customary to believe that it is only in the beginnings of history in extreme antiquity that legends are found This is a mistake. Legend is everywhere, in the present as in the near and the most remote past. To satisfy its passions, to create idols for its worship and demons for its execration, the human mind transforms all things—even the realities that surround it and in which it lives. The popes, the sovereigns, the heads of the parties that rule the country, men celebrated in the arts and sciences or in various forms of practical activity, are even while alive semi-fantastic figures to all, those who have no personal knowledge of them, but see and hear them only from afar. This is true of the majority What virtues and what vices, which they never possessed, does not admiration or hostility attribute to them! And death naturally enriches and develops the legends of those who are not forgotten. Cavour, Bismarck, Napoleon, Victor Hugo, Dante, are in the minds of most people not less fabulous than Tiberius and Nero. The legend which admiration or hatred weaves about such characters frequently becomes so compact and tenacious after a few decades that not even the historians can dispel it. A historian needs great poise of spirit, great perspicacity, an immense experience of life, profound understanding of all the frailties and illusions of the human heart, to get at the truth about a man whose contemporaries have loved or hated him greatly

It is not to be regarded as a strange thing, then, that the Caesars and all their family have become the subjects of a great romantic legend The strange thing is that this legend should be so grim and terrible. Many a legend exaggerates the virtues of its hero; but this one has horribly deformed the figures of the first emperors, especially those of Tiberius and Claudius. If Tiberius was a wise, just, firm and austere emperor, how has it happened that posterity sees him clothed in the garments of a cruel and perverse tyrant? If Claudius achieved and aided in the achievement of so many important undertakings, why has posterity mocked him as an imbecile?

Let us consider this mystery.

The powers of the Caesars resulted from two causes—the extension of the empire and the decline of the Roman aristocracy. In the most ancient times, Rome had been a small aristocratic republic, ruled by a few hundred families who had the wisdom to hold the state in their hands for centuries, in the manner of all intelligent aristocracies—by not abusing their privileges excessively, by not holding themselves in too great isolation, by renewing their blood. Almost all the positions of public trust were elective. The people as a whole were called upon to choose the magistrates; but on the other hand, to be a candidate for the magistracy, one needed to belong at least to the rank of the cavaliers—a kind of minor aristocracy to which even the families of the people might belong provided they could meet certain conditions as to fortune, culture and respectability. At the same time, the sons of senators were cavaliers by right of birth, so that in the competition for the magisterial offices they had a great advantage over the other social classes. And since the senators were selected by the censors from among those who had occupied certain magistracies, the senatorial dignity, without being exactly hereditary, was, in many families, transmitted from father to son. The Senate was full of kinsmen—brothers, cousins, uncles, grandsons, fathers-in-law—relatives of every degree. But its doors were not closed to the lower classes, for rising gradually from the plebs to the rank of cavalier, from the rank of cavalier to the Senate, many obscure families came in the course of centuries to fill the gaps which the waste of time left in the ranks of the aristocracy In short, the Senate was the acropolis of the social structure, and the aristocracy, strongly entrenched in this ancient institution, was able for centuries to dominate the state

The great victories and the expansion of the empire greatly helped the aristocracy to conserve its power and prestige. Of course, even in the prosperous days of the aristocratic rule, the people agitated, protested, sought in diverse ways to use their political rights for the improvement of their condition. Rome was the field of lively social struggles. In the Senate various cliques and families intrigued and quarrelled one with another. But down to the beginning of the second century before Christ—that is, until after the second war with Carthage—these struggles and discords did not weaken the power of the aristocracy, which from the vantage ground of the Senate dominated and ruled the state



DRAWN BY CHARLES LENNOX WRIGHT

The romance of the love of Antony and Cleopatra hid a political and military plan wherein Antony, foreseeing the break-up of the Roman Empire, was to seize Egypt, the best of her provinces.

After the second Punic war, however, a new order of affairs began. The empire spread rapidly, beyond the sea, both in Europe and in Asia. The wealth and culture of the Orient produced an economic, moral and intellectual revolution in Italy. Not a few of the oldest and most respected families of the nobility fell on evil days or were completely ruined; on the other hand, many obscure families grew rapidly wealthy. The ranks of the cavaliers filled up with the nouveaux riches, who, proud of their wealth, no longer kept their former respect for the Senate and the old aristocracy. In the aristocracy, the ferment of discord increased, owing to the economic crises, the new ideas imported from Greece and to the new difficulties brought upon Roman politics by the expanding empire. At the very moment when the aristocracy needed to hold all its forces together to govern the enlarged empire, it was weakened by the outbreak of violent political wars. A hundred families had been able to govern Italy sufficiently well; but would they have force enough to govern a mighty empire across the sea which embraced vast and diverse regions, states, peoples and civilizations? And just when its task was piling up so unprecedentedly, the Roman aristocracy began to rend itself with furious internal discord!

The effect was not slow to appear. After 150 B. C. the Roman state, the ancient and glorious aristocratic republic, went rapidly to pieces. Its finances became disorganized, its army demoralized. Defeats became frequent. Many provinces rose in revolt. And finally, the moment came when Italy was invaded by the Cimbrians and the Teutons! All these misfortunes increased exasperation in Rome. The aristocracy split into two parties so intensely opposed to one another that they finally had recourse to arms. With this war, named after Marius and Sulla, the leaders of the two parties, began those terrible civil wars that drenched with blood the last century of the republic.

What kind of affairs were these Roman civil wars whose fame has survived so many centuries? To understand them, one needs to be careful not to confuse them with the civil wars which Europe has witnessed during the last hundred and fifty years. Many people, making the mistake of looking at Roman history across the glamour of the French Revolution, lend to the Roman a tinge of color that does not belong to it. It is in this way that we have made Caesar an anticipation of Napoleon; and of the civil wars of Rome a struggle like the French Revolution in which the people and the middle classes revolted against the aristocracy in an effort to destroy its privileges and to conquer the state

This is a grave mistake and is the source of all the other mistakes which our times commit in judging the history of the empire and the history of the Caesars.

It is true that in these civil wars we find one party that calls itself popular and another that calls itself aristocratic; but back of these parties there stand no two social classes one of which is defending and the other attempting to conquer power. Instead there are two hostile divisions of the Roman aristocracy contending with one another for the control of the little aristocratic state which is the key to the entire empire and all its rich treasures. At the head both of the party that calls itself popular and also of the party that calls itself aristocratic stand nobles—members of that ancient aristocracy which down to the beginning of the second century B. C. had governed the empire with so much concord. The masses that fight the battles and spill their blood for one side or the other have no thought of conquering power themselves or for their own class; they want to conquer it for that group of aristocratic families by whom they are led, in the hope of securing one or another kind of advantage, material or political.

One must grasp this point clearly if one wishes to understand the strange figures of the Caesars and the stranger legends that have flowered about them. In ancient Italy, the middle classes and the people never aspired to govern the state; they never pretended that the more intelligent and energetic men of their class had the right to compete for the high civil and military posts with the more illustrious members of the nobility. This democratic sentiment was unknown in those days. The ancient Roman aristocracy which had conquered so magnificent an empire, won so many wars, issued victorious from so many trials, was respected and venerated by the whole of Italy almost as if it were divine. Its privileges were regarded as just and legitimate by every one No one in Italy could have conceived the possibility of the empire being governed except by the Senate, or of the Senate or the high civil and military positions being filled by others than the descendants of those great families that had founded the greatness of Rome. Especially when it came to the army, all Italy demanded that all the generals should be nobles—descendants of those great families that had won so many battles. The soldiers—the great majority of whom were furnished by the rural population of Italy—would have been the first to revolt if men of humble origin or of their own class had been placed at the head of their regiments.

In short, the civil wars of Rome arose out of the internal dissensions of the aristocracy. When the old political discipline gave way, both parties sought to win the favor and support of the middle classes and the people in their effort to win control. But the legitimacy of aristocratic rule and of the privileges of the aristocracy were neither seriously discussed nor threatened in these wars, the first of which, as I have said, goes by the names of the two leaders as the War of Marius and Sulla. This war ended with the defeat of the party that was led by Marius; with the ruin, proscription or extermination of the aristocratic families that followed him: and with a deeper tempt to restore the old constitution, the old customs, the old ideas and the old peace and civic discipline. But Sulla exerted the energy of his will and the sagacity of his fertile talent in vain upon these attempts. Once he was dead dissension again broke out in all its fury among the aristocracy which was now divided by too many interests, ambitions, aspirations, rancors to become a harmonious unit again. The entire age of Caesar was torn by intrigues and violence among the little aristocratic factions that struggled among themselves for power, for the possession of the magistracy in the cities or the command of the provinces, struggled by every conceivable means, promises, bribes, blows, to get a majority in the Comitia or the Senate in times of peace, or a majority of the legions when a new war broke out.

This was the famous civil war between Caesar and Pompey. But this, too, was not a war between the aristocracy and the people; it was a war between two factions of the aristocracy. The great majority of the aristocracy, including the great majority of the Senate, supported Pompey, who also had behind him the majority of the legions; with Caesar, on the other hand, stood a small minority of the Senate and the whole army with which after a war of ten years he had conquered the Gauls. This army was less numerous than the one Pompey commanded, but it had more experience of war; and Caesar was a great general and more mature than Pompey. With the help of strategy Caesar was accordingly able to put the opposing legions to rout. But he was unable to win over the majority of the aristocracy or of the Senate whom he had conquered on the field of battle Even when they were left impotent by Caesar's victories, the majority of the aristocracy kept their hatred for him, and held aloof from him in spite of all the efforts Caesar made to conciliate them; and by obstructive tactics, by declining offices, refraining from taking part in the sittings of the Senate, they succeeded in rendering Caesar's victory in great part vain—almost succeeded in turning it into a defeat. The greatest of men cannot govern a vast empire alone; he needs officers, agents, representatives. And where was Caesar to find his generals and other officers of the army, governors for the provinces and the like if the majority of the aristocracy and of the Senate declined to accept his appointments, saying: "You have taken possession of the State with your army; very well, let us see you govern it alone!"

The story of the short dictatorship of Caesar is indeed the story of a desperate struggle against the obstructionistic tactics of the aristocracy without whom it was impossible to govern the empire. He tried to overcome their opposition by every means—threats and cajolery, promises and force. Repeatedly he tried to place men of humble origin in positions of high command, in high civil offices and in the Senate—to create, this is, a new aristocracy to oppose and supercede the old. But he was not able to go very far in this direction because the procedure was too offensive to the sentiments and ideas of the masses of Italy For them, the empire might not be governed except by the families of the old aristocracy; governors and officials of humble origin had no standing with them at all! Threatened silently by this passive resistance Caesar finally resorted to the desperate expedient of reinforcing his power over his soldiers by promising his legions lands, rewards in money and sumptuous pensions, and increasing their privileges and pay. But at last, on the 15th of March, 44 B. C., he fell a victim of that part of the Roman aristocracy which had never accepted his authority nor recognized his victory

And after his death, a new civil war broke out in the empire, longer and more terrible than the two that had preceded it. But again in this war, it is two factions of the aristocracy that are struggling for power. Marcus Antonius, Marcus Lepidus, the future Augustus, and the other leaders of the party of Caesar all belonged either by birth or by adoption to the old and noble families of Rome, no less than Marcus and Decimus Brutus, Caius Cassius and all the other captains of the aristocratic party. And the two parties and the two armies fought not to destroy or sustain the authority of the Senate and the power of the aristocracy which no one called in question; they fought to decide whether all the laws and decrees enacted and promulgated by Caesar during his dictatorship should stand or not—among them the laws and decrees which assigned or promised lands and money to the soldiers. Never did it enter the minds of any of the innumerable soldiers who shed their blood at Philippi in behalf of the cause of Caesar under the command of Marcus Antonius—more familiarly known as Mark Antony—and the future Augustus, that Italy and the empire might be governed by any authority other than that of the Senate, by other persons than the members of the ancient aristocratic families whose names appeared on every page of the glorious history of the republic.

So that the Roman aristocracy, which for a century had been unequal to its too rapidly growing task, was bled by the civil wars to a point beyond the possibility of recovery. And the gravity of the condition appears in its menacing entirety after the battle of Philippi. Antony and the future Augustus are now masters of the empire; but they find themselves facing a greater difficulty than that which confronted Caesar. The Senate is half empty; men of high lineage are lacking to fill all the civil and military offices of the republic; the whole administration of the empire is falling into terrible disorder for lack of capable men. Mark Antony and the future Augustus try to remedy the difficulty as best they can; they fill the Senate with minor officers from the army; they try to piece together a new nobility with families of humble origin. But the remedy does not prove more efficacious when tried by them than it did when tried by Caesar. The Senate so made up is without prestige, because for centuries Italy has been accustomed to venerate in the Senate an assemblage of gentlemen of ancient lineage; the courts, bestowed freely upon people of all ranks and conditions, are discredited; the discipline of the army under generals without the authority of high rank, disappears. The empire, bereft of the glorious aristocracy which founded it, is threatened with ruin. Its dissolution seems so inevitable that Antony tries at one time to detach the richest and most promising provinces of the Orient and to found a new dynasty at Alexandria.

The famous romance of the love of Antony and Cleopatra in reality hid a vast political and military plan that contemplated the dismemberment of the Roman empire. Antony, convinced that the Senate and the aristocracy of Rome no longer had the strength to hold the empire together, conceived the idea, together with Cleopatra, of anticipating this inevitable catastrophe, to his own advantage, by seizing the most beautiful and highly civilized of the provinces and continuing in them the dynasty of the Ptolemies

At Actium this vast scheme crumbled. But the danger had been so great and so imminent that it reacted in an immense conservationalist and patriotic movement in Italy

The might of the Caesars begins with the extraordinary powers which, in the year 27 B. C., were conferred upon Augustus by the joint will of the Senate and the people under the spell of the victory at Actium. Augustus initiated the rule of the Caesars with this extremely difficult program: The restoration of the ancient aristocratic government at a time when the historical aristocracy had all but disappeared, when it was reduced to a small number of surviving families. It is the inevitable contradictions and difficulties of this impossible task that will explain the major mysteries of the history of the Caesars.

Theatrical Season Near End Even if Snow Has Just Left the Ground

Managers Don't Seem to Be Looking Ahead of the Plays Now on the Schedule

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

It is a good time to mention quietly that unmistakable signs of the approaching end of the theatrical season are being posted. Only a few more weeks of any marked activity remain, and the managers are beginning to wonder whether all has been well—or not—with the drama of 1913-14. You may draw your own conclusions. The managers don't have to guess—they know.

The first house to run into early Spring darkness is the Shubert, a condition forced upon the management by the vagaries of woman. To be more explicit, Blanche Ring developed Spring fever last Saturday, and refused to move another step. She wanted to get back to New York, where the flowers are budding and where life is sweeter than it was during the two weeks she tried to amuse Boston with "When Claudia Smiles." The sudden determination of Miss Ring to close her season threw the Shubert into darkness, which will continue for another week. Then you will have E. H. Sothern for two weeks in a repertoire that runs from tragedy to blithesome comedy.

Except at the Tremont Theatre, where "Adele" will be offered May 11, there are no attractions announced beyond the current bills. That in itself is a pretty safe indication that the season, for the most part, is sagging at the knees. Already the Cort has passed from the legitimate drama to moving pictures of the Mexican war, and in another week the Globe will lose "Bringing Up Father" and take on a new moving picture play that is expected to stir your feelings with its exposure of the traffic in drugs. How much longer the attractions now playing at the local theatres will remain depends upon the weather and the inclination of the public to be amused by theatrical entertainment. From this point, however, it looks as if three more weeks would show several large and conspicuous vacant places in the field of entertainment.

MR. DI PESA EXPLAINS—Joe Di Pesa of the business force at the Plymouth Theatre, explains that a bad cold on his chest was all that kept him from leading a division of actresses in yesterday's suffrage parade.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

There is more genuine comedy in "The Reformers" than is usually found in plays of small-town life. While some improvement might wisely be made in the company that is interpreting John Cumberland's play at the Hollis, there is no escaping the fact that in many respects the comedy is the keenest and most amusing satire of human nature that we have had for many months. The author, with unerring skill, has injected the real flavor of the suburbs into his play, and Donald Meek, who heads the company, reveals himself as a comedian to be reckoned with in the biggest field of theatrical endeavor. Mr. Meek has always been accepted in Boston as a brilliant actor of light comedy, but nothing he has ever done approaches his meek and modest Archie in "The Reformers." If the atmosphere of suburban life interests you, "The Reformers" will give you an evening of solid enjoyment. If you happen to be a suburbanite yourself, you will uncover certain bits of delicious humor that strike very close to your own town, perhaps your own street, and very possibly your own home. "The Reformers" is the merriest comedy of the late season—and it is true to nature.

FAMOUS SAYINGS BY FAMOUS MEN—"The trouble with these new society dances is that they make you feel like a blonde chorus man."—Glenmore Davis, business representative for "The Misleading Lady."

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

It was remarked in a recent magazine article that the public does not realize that in letting E. H. Sothern transform himself into a tragedian it has lost a great comedian. The fact is, and I have Mr. Sothern's word for it, that he has never had any notion of turning his back upon the comic muse. Of the eight Shakespearean characters he has presented during the past nine years, but three have been tragic—Romeo, Macbeth and Hamlet. Against these three roles we have had him as Benedict, Petruchio, Jacques, Shylock and Malvolio. And during these years he has also appeared as Lord Dundreary, Richard Lovelace and Francois Villon.

During one of his seasons it was customary for Mr. Sothern to appear as Hamlet at the matinee and as Lord Dundreary in the evening. A more violent contrast of character could hardly be imagined. It has been claimed by Mr. Sothern's most loyal critics that it is doubtful whether he would ever have achieved such extraordinary success as Francois Villon in "If I Were King" had he not tempered his powers as a comedian with a season or two of tragedy. In his approaching engagement at the Shubert Mr. Sothern will be seen in comedy, romance and tragedy, for he has arranged his repertoire so that it will include "If I Were King," "Lord Dundreary," "Hamlet" and Mr. McCarthy's new play, "Charlemagne." Indeed, Mr. Sothern has not bid farewell to comedy.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

RATTLING THE SKELETON—Charles Goddard, author of "The Misleading Lady," was once a newspaper man in Boston, but reformed in order to write three successful plays. He is also a Dartmouth graduate—class of 1902.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

Here's something to stir your melodramatic tastes. "The Drug Terror" is announced as the next attraction at the Globe, coming May 11. It is a motion picture play in six parts and was produced under the auspices of the Sociological Fund of the Medical Review of Reviews. With an indorsement like that and the knowledge in advance that the films were made to assist the Sociological Fund, etc., in its crusade against cocaine and other drugs, there shouldn't be much question about the virtue of the exhibition. You are told by the men back of the enterprise that the films tell an absorbing story, with a graphic pictorial presentation of the deadly effect of drugs upon the human mind and body. Old fashioned melodrama may have passed away, but we still have the movies to supply thrills and sensations.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

THE TRUTH AT LAST—Doris Keane, the charming star of "Romance," makes palmistry her hobby. A glance at the palm of her business manager, Louis Nethersole, developed the astonishing fact that he would some day be a pirate. Mr. Nethersole says palmistry is dinged nonsense anyway.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

Richard Bennett, who is trying to uplift everybody with "Damaged Goods," has been having a terrible time with Chicago's official censor. What Mr. Bennett says about Chicago and its censor not only makes lively reading, but it shows that the actor knows how to make people listen to him—which, of course, is good advertising. Also Mr. Bennett does not have much faith in the morals of his country. Listen to him: "The country is populated by acidulated mental virgins; it has gone mad with secret viciousness concealed by public prudery. Your Funkhouser (Chicago's censor) is an ass who recognizes no distinction between Balzac and Laura Jean Libbey. Chicago buncoed me into coming back to play in a dollar theatre on a charge that if I am sincere I will play at prices not prohibitive to the masses. I will never do it again. The masses need my gospel—let them pay for it hereafter." All of which indicates that Mr. Bennett is in a greatly peeved frame of mind.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

GOOD STOCK NOTE—Beverly West, who is with "The Reformers" at the Hollis, is not only a Boston girl, but is a granddaughter of the late Charles Barron, for many years the leading man in the famous Boston Museum stock company.

BILLS AT THE PLAYHOUSES

Colonial Theatre.

The exasperating sex appeal aroused by the sensuous dress of the modern female, is the idea which supplies the motive for "The Misleading Lady," the farce comedy which closed its seven months' run at the Fulton Theatre, New York, last night and opens its Boston engagement at the Colonial Theatre tomorrow night. The play is presented by William Harris, Jr., and Lewis S. Stone is the featured player. Mr. Harris is known to Boston for his bringing here the production of "The Yellow Jacket" at the Tremont last season. His father is the Harris of Frohman and Harris, so closely identified with Boston and national theatricals for the last quarter of a century. Mr. Stone is practically unknown to Boston, because he has only been seen here in one play previously.

Gaiety Theatre.

Bobby Manchester has a brand on his "Cracker Jacks" which means something to the fellow who knows what is going on the big burlesque wheel. The show is due at the Gaiety Theatre tomorrow. The features of the show will be the first part called "Mulligan's Mardi Gras," and the finale number "Back to Nature." George Totten Smith is responsible for both. In the cast will be seen Jeannie Jess, Leo Kendall, Dan Niblo, Jim Doherty, Beatrice Harlowe, Etta Hastings, Frances Riley, Zella Rambo and Madeline Webb.

Castle Square Theatre.

"The Deep Purple" has broken many records, and it is therefore safe to say that it has a week of extreme popularity before it at the Castle Square. It is a play of the New York underworld of today, and its melodramatic scenes and powerful, thrilling plot are of an intensity that command the undiverted attention of the audience. Its author is Paul Armstrong, to whom both "The Deep Purple" and "Alias Jimmy Valentine" have brought an exceptional amount of fame as a creator of melodrama. In every scene and act "The Deep Purple" is a play filled with vigor and sensation, yet there is nothing offensive in it in any way, and it is as entertaining to children as to older theatregoers.

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

Louise Alexander, creator of the "Apache Dance" and the "Vampire Dance" with Anna Held in "Miss Innocence," and one of the most graceful and skilled of all exponents of modern society dances, comes to B. F. Keith's Theatre this week. This remarkable feature will be but one turn in a long bill. Gus Edwards' "Matinee Girls" is a miniature musical comedy presented by Will J. Ward, Irene Martin and a bouquet of dashing beauties. This production is in two scenes. Other features will be Mack and Walker in a musical flirtation, Mullen and Coogan, the original Mantell and Cohan of "Wine, Woman and Song"; Minnie Allen, in a novel turn; Flanagan and Edwards, in a comedy of life behind the scenes called "Off and On"; Hal and Francis, in the musical comedy, "The Stock Farm," and Ower and Ower, offering a European novelty act.

Hollis Street Theatre.

The engagement of the new three-act comedy, "The Reformers," at the Hollis Street Theatre, originally intended to have been of but one week's duration, has been extended another week, owing to the decided hit the piece has made. Not in recent years has there been seen at the Hollis Street Theatre a more sparkling comedy than "The Reformers." It is simply brimming with amusing complications and laughable situations.

Majestic Theatre.

"Within the Law," Bayard Veiller's world-wide successful drama, which has been filling the Majestic Theatre for nearly three months now, enters on the twelfth week tomorrow night, making a record achieved by very few Boston theatrical engagements. In another week this remarkable play with the original New York cast, headed by Jane Cowl, will have started on its fourth month in this city.

Park Theatre.

At the Park Theatre tomorrow evening, "Young Wisdom" begins the second week of its Boston engagement. Both Edith and Mabel Taliaferro, the twin stars in the production, scored individual hits on the opening night, each having a part just suited to her own personality.

Boston Theatre.

Typical of New England's rugged honesty, simple ways and sterling traits and charity, "The Old Homestead" is back again at the Boston Theatre, the scene of its first production twenty-eight years ago. Like a piece of old tapestry or a painting by the old masters, its colors, the light and shade of country and city life have stood the test of a generation and its appeal to old and young is as strong as ever. Many members of the original company, under the personal direction of Frank Thompson, are appearing here. The famous musical features are of the same high order Mr. Thompson has always provided, including the celebrated double quartet and grand choir of twenty voices in the Grace Church scene.

Wilbur Theatre.

The third week at the Wilbur Theatre of the impersonation by Doris Keane of La Cavallini, in Edward Sheldon's play, "Romance," begins tomorrow evening. Doris Keane's triumph is of a permanent quality. Edward Sheldon was fortunate in having the co-operation of the brilliant young actress.

Cort Theatre.

The Mexican war pictures are attracting an unusual amount of interest at the Cort Theatre, not alone from their educational value, but from the excellent idea that one gets of the Mexican country. It is seldom that such stirring events are visualised through the medium of the film. Actual battle scenes are shown for the first time between Villa and the Federals, and the ruins wrought by the contending armies. Count de Besa, who is a friend of the principals of both sides of the revolution, gives an interesting and thoroughly understanding explanation of the films.

Sothern at the Shubert.

E. H. Sothern will be the attraction at the Shubert Theatre for two weeks beginning Monday, May 11. The Shubert Theatre will be dark during the present week. The novelty of Mr. Sothern's repertoire for his forthcoming engagement will be Justin Huntley McCarthy's new romantic drama "Charlemagne." The first representation of this play occurred at the Garrick Theatre, Chicago, a fortnight ago. The role of Charles, afterwards Charlemagne, which will be impersonated by Mr. Sothern, is said to be a mixture of Benedick of "Much Ado About Nothing," and Petruchio of "Taming of the Shrew"—a romantic warrior who goes through the drama surmounting seemingly impossible difficulties, evading death, conquering enemies, dodging assassination, and finally winning a beautiful Amazon for his wife.

It was in Boston in 1901 that Mr. Sothern appeared for the first time as Francois Villon in Mr. McCarthy's romantic play, "If I were King." During Mr. Sothern's two week at the Shubert, he will be seen in two performances of "Hamlet," four of "Lord Dundreary," and five each of "If I Were King" and "Charlemagne."

Globe Theatre.

The last week of the engagement of the George McManus cartoon comedy, "Bringing Up Father," will begin with the matinee performance at the Globe tomorrow. This bright, snappy musical farce has entertained hosts of Boston theatregoers the past two weeks, and has been voted one of the best laughing shows of the season. The story of "Father" and his family striving to enter society after falling heir to a fortune is told with hilarious fun.

Plymouth Theatre.

When "Under Cover" completed its performance last night at the Plymouth Theatre it equaled the phenomenal record scored by George Arliss in "Disraeli," which ran at this house for nineteen consecutive weeks last season. "Under Cover" is a clean and wholesome melodrama with plenty of snap to it.

Scenic Temple.

One of the most elaborate productions ever seen on the burlesque stage, Joe Hurtig's "Taxi Girls" Company, will be the attraction at Waldron's Casino this week. The scenic and costume equipment is said to equal anything in the burlesque field.

Tremont Theatre.

The last week of David Warfield's four weeks' engagement in "The Auctioneer" begins at the Tremont Theatre tomorrow evening. Mr Warfield has never been received in Boston more cordially than on his present visit. In none of the other plays that Mr. Warfield has used has his role been so wholly and completely a stage reflection of his own personality.

Grand Opera House.

The Grand Opera House will close the present season tonight (Sunday) with a concert comprising high-class vaudeville features and moving pictures.

Howard Athenaeum.

Jess Willard, a "White Hope," will be seen at the Howard Athenaeum this week in an athletic sketch called "The Training Camp." The management will also present "The Mascotte Rah Rah Burlesquers" in a new carnival of fun.

Bowdoin Square Theatre.

Ten diving nymphs will give an exhibition of their skill this week at the Bowdoin Square Theatre. Monday and Tuesday night there will be amateur diving contests.

"Quo Vadis."

"Quo Vadis" will tomorrow enter upon its third week at the Tremont Temple, where it is repeating its former big success when it ran for an entire Summer in Boston last season. The production is presented in three acts and eight parts, and in the principal roles are seen Italian stage celebrities.

St. James Theatre.

The Ruskin Troupe, one of the world's greatest acrobatic spectacles, will top the bill at Loew's St. James Theatre the first three days of the coming week. James C. Morton and Ralph Austin will head the bill the last half of the week in a new act.

Orpheum Theatre.

James C. Morton and Roger Austin, formerly in "The Honeymoon Express," will head the bill at Loew's Orpheum the first three days of the coming week. "The Book Agent," a new comedy sketch, with Frederick Wallace and Mark Hart, will be the headliner for the last half of the week.

New Play by Owen Johnson.

Selwyn & Company, who are presenting the two most conspicuous successes of the season in Boston, "Within the Law" at the Majestic Theatre, and "Under Cover" at the Plymouth Theatre, have secured the rights to "Salamander," dramatized by the author, Owen Johnson, from his own novel of the same title, and will produce it in Boston in three weeks. The cast will be recruited from the "Within the Law" and "Under Cover" companies, and will include Jane Cowl, William Courtenay, Lucille Watson, Florence Nash, Wilton Taylor, Lola Fisher, William Norton, Kenneth Hill and Dorothy Abbott.

Scollay Square Olympia.

"Tess of the Storm Country," with Mary Pickford in the leading role, will be one of the extra features of the coming week's bill at the Scollay Square Olympia. The production is presented in five parts and is acclaimed the most stirring photo-play ever produced. The picture will be presented for the entire week in addition to the regular bill of high class vaudeville, that will include Walter Brown and company in a dramatic playlet entitled "His Father's Son," and Lucky and Yeast in "The Jealous Lovers."

Waldron's Casino.

The fourth instalment of "The Perils of Pauline" will head the motion picture attraction at the Scenic Temple the coming week. Other feature pictures will be the "Mutual Girl Sees New Styles," "Texas Bill's Last Ride" and the Keystone comedies.

A Great Personal Tribute
TO DORIS KEANE
By H. T. PARKER in the Boston Transcript

Miss Keane's acting of the prima donna in "Romance" at the new Wilbur is the distinction of the place and the performance. . . . Throughout the play she seems resourceful mistress of her voice as are few actresses of our stage, elder or younger. She can color her tones with La Cavallini's moods; she can make them summon pictures out of the singer's past; she can make them significant in the sharp transitions that the dialogue often exacts; she can warm them with amorous passion and touch them with pity and foreboding. . . . Such vocal imagination artistry and resources are rare possessions—and in a young actress—in our English-speaking theatre. . . . She has the penetrating and analytic imagination that enters into the mind, the heart and the traits of her personage and discovers many a truthful and characteristic detail to illuminate and enforce it. . . . Twenty little details etch out La Cavallini before the understanding and imagination of the audience. . . . Then in the final scenes with the banker and the parson Miss Keane summons in deep, rich strokes the mastered passion of the woman. . . . The third faculty is the play of the light and shade of histrionic skill just below the surface of what it is calling into illusive life. . . . The fourth faculty blends the personality of the actress within that of the character she is assuming. . . . To crown all these faculties Miss Keane has the telepathic power which is the mark of the born and predestined actress, and which none may teach and none of themselves may gain. . . . Then by the mere presence of this power was the actress more eloquent than in all her spoken word and vivid gesture.

VOTES FOR WOMEN ONLY A DETAIL

Miss Crothers Sees Her Sex Moving Toward a Loftier Plane.

Assuming that you follow the affairs of the stage, you must have heard of Rachel Crothers.

Miss Crothers is an author

The most recent play produced by Miss Crothers is "Young Wisdom," a satirical comedy now at the Park, in which Mabel and Edith Taliaferro are being starred. "Young Wisdom" is typically a Rachel Crothers type of play, because it gets at things which are agitating a lot of people and gets at them in a way you can't resent, no matter what your own private views may be on the subject. Miss Crothers is a firm believer in the complete emancipation of womankind and she is not adverse to expressing those views

"Then you are a suffragette?" a friend suggested recently, while they were discussing the subject

"I presume I am," replied Miss Crothers

"You believe in the ballot for women?", the friend persisted

Miss Crothers answered with emphasis.

"The ballot is only one little piffling detail in the general scheme of evolutionized womanhood. We are moving slowly but certainly toward a loftier plane which cannot possibly have any other effect than to make us all broader, bigger and better men and women. Work is work and work knows no sex. Therefore, I believe that women are bound to take their place alongside of men and that they will carve out a new and vastly elevated place for themselves."

The Lambs' Gambol.

Final details for the fourth public Gambol of the Lambs' Club, which will be held in Boston on the afternoon and evening of Saturday, May 30 (Decoration Day), are being settled. One of the most remarkable programs ever offered is promised for this occasion. Although the name of the theatre where this notable entertainment is to be given is still withheld, it has been settled that contrary to former custom, there will be no auction sale of boxes and seats. It will be entirely a matter of "first come, first served." The scale of prices will satisfy all purses.

In every respect this year's Gambol will overtop all others. There will be so many more stars on the roster that a Pullman train of twelve cars will be needed—six compartment cars, three dining cars, two baggage cars and one club car. The entertainment itself will be so attractive that, for the first time, two performances, matinee and night, will be allotted to several of the largest cities. Better than all, the club spirit is at fever heat, and every actor and manager is working heart and soul to offer a program that has never been equalled.

WARFIELD KNEW HOW TO SUCCEED

But 'Twas Hard Work to Convince Lederer That "Peddler" Could Win.

Since David Warfield has in his remarkable creation of Simon Levi in "The Auctioneer" given to the world a classic, it is interesting to note how the character was evolved and the difficulty Mr. Warfield experienced before he was finally allowed to give it to the public.

It was while he was a member of the New York Casino company that Warfield begged George Lederer to let him introduce a Hebrew specialty into "The Merry World." But Lederer was afraid that it would offend his clientele, which was composed largely of Jews.

But one day the New York Herald arranged a baseball game to be played between actors at the Polo Grounds. Warfield was to take part. So when the day of the game arrived the grounds were crowded, when suddenly out upon the field walked a Jew peddler, the short beard, the too large derby crushed down over his ears, the shuffling gait, the grin which showed white teeth above a rolling underlip, all uncannily true to life.

In five minutes he was the most talked about figure on the field. In ten minutes everybody knew it was David Warfield. After the game Lederer came to him in a great hurry and said: "Can you do that tonight in the show?" And that very evening the character of Simon Levi was introduced into the Casino Review, and Warfield's Broadway reputation was made.

New Musical Comedy.

The new musical comedy, "Phyllis," the book and lyrics of which were written by James Cunningham Gray, a member of an old Boston family, with music by Harold Vicars, will be presented at the Cort Theatre for its metropolitan premiere Monday night, May 11. The title role will be portrayed by Miss Grace Freeman, who is gifted with a sweet mezzo-soprano voice of excellent quality, and who is a rara avis to the stage in that she is versatile enough to either sing a comic opera role or play romantic comedy with equal skill and amiability.

Motion Pictures on Mexico at the Cort

Scenes of the Country and Recent Tragic History.

Hundreds of the army and navy who are impatiently waiting for Uncle Sam to turn loose his "bulldogs of war" have gone to the Cort Theatre during the past week to learn the truth about revolutionary Mexico and the grim tragedies of war. In the 7,000 feet of motion photography there is shown the beauty of Mexico before the revolution, when it was considered the playground of North America. The films show the gorgeous flower-feasts, the fondness of the Mexican men and women for Parisian dress, and their pastimes, the bull fight, and a thrilling nine-mile steeplechase.

Then come the effects of the terrible bombardments, scenes immediately before and after the murder of Madero, the penitentiary where he was confined and the penitentiary wall, showing where he was shot, his funeral and his last resting place. The destruction of railroads, which is mostly American property, and the dynamiting of Raton Raton bridge, which cost $100,000

Street scenes in Mexico City and the palace of Huerta. Huerta himself, his guards and his Congressmen, are also shown in these pictures.

Miss Alexander Creator of 'Vampire'

Louise Alexander, who comes to B. F. Keith's Theatre this week with Olive Logan in a cycle of society dances of the moment, is one of the best known dancers on the American stage. Miss Alexander, before becoming a devotee of the tango and hesitation waltz, was best known to fame as the creator of the "Vampire Dance." She also danced the "Apache" dance with Julian Mitchell in "The Follies," and later appeared with Anna Held in "Miss Innocence."

It is getting harder and harder every year for managers to secure good dancers for the big musical shows, for the simple reason that the best dancers have taken up tangoing, and are earning large salaries as teachers in the dance halls along Broadway. As Carter de Haven so neatly expressed it in one of his songs at Keith's last week. "If they fail in a store, they lay down a floor, and there's another dance hall on Broadway!"

Coming Events.

"Adele," one of the brightest musical comedy successes of the present New York season, is announced at the Tremont beginning May 11.

Beginning Monday, May 11, the Globe will offer a startling motion picture drama called "The Drug Terror."

"Waddy," "Mollie" and "Tony" Miss Orford's trio of educated elephants, will make their farewell appearance on any stage at B. F. Keith's Theatre next week.

VEILED PROPHETS HAVE BIG SESSION

Omar Grotto of Boston Ferries Half a Hundred New Members Across.

One of the most successful sessions of Omar Grotto, No. [illegible] Mystic Order of Veiled Prophets of the Enchanted Realms, was held Wednesday evening at Copley Hall.

After a business meeting the dinner march was formed with Grand Monarch Hiram D. Rodgers of New York and Monarch [illegible] Lochman in the lead, followed by Dwight E. Cone of Fall River, George Beal of Hamilton, New York, Past Monarchs Alfred E. Anderson and Thomas F. Murray. Then came nearly 400 visiting prophets and neophytes and members of Omar.

Omar Grotto of Boston is known throughout the realm for its excellence in the rendering of the ritual of the order, and visitors were well repaid for coming.

More than half a hundred neophtes were ferried across and Monarch Dean E. Lochman was gratified with the efforts of his co-workers and appreciated the endeavor to bring the membership to 500.

Chief Justice Bancroft L. Goodwin carried his share of the evening's entertainment with credit, as did Master of Ceremonies Edwin D Dyer. During the evening enthusiasm was aroused by the Grotto band, which played patriotic airs under direction of Prophet McKenny

Many grottoes were represented.

Among those present were: Grand Monarch Hiram D. Rodgers, Azim, New York City; Grand Standard Bearer, Dr. Dwight E. Cone, P. M., Azab, Fall River; Monarch Arthur F. Fish, J. Arthur Childs, C. J., West Sidaway, M. C., Alvin E. Weeks, P. M. of Azab, Fall River; Monarch Robbins and Arthur Burtelle, P. M, Aletheia, Worcester; Monarch Roger E. Pike, Orian, Rutland, Vt.; Monarch E. French Issard, Cashmere, Elmira, N. Y.; George Beal, P. M., Mokanna, Hamilton, N. Y.; E. E. Blohm, P. M., Long Island, Brooklyn, N. Y; William Dara, C. J., Isaac Jenks, M. C. and Robert M. Being Funny Is Serious Work

By DONALD MEEK.

There is decidedly no fun being funny on the stage. Acting is largely a mental process and when I am given a new part I spend considerable time and thought in actualizing the individual I am supposed to characterize. Not until I have arrived at a definite personality for the character I am to portray do I attempt to begin memorizing the lines. Before and after there is much hard work in creating and sticking to the impersonation impersonating the character of Archibald Wilkins Wayne, who is a diminutive, mild-mannered chap, henpecked by his wife and bectored by his neighbors, I am less handicapped than in any other of the seven hundred and seventy roles I have played It will be unnecessary for me to state that, by stature, I am fitted to the part, though I won't admit that my experiences, domestic and otherwise, make me particularly responsive to the emotions of the "henpecked."

I always try to enter into a spirit of intimacy with my audience. I not only want them to laugh at me, but I want them to laugh with me. I event want to let the audience do part of the acting I tell you, there is a secret in that. And an actor to be popular and succeed must love his audience, must give all of himself to those people out front. If audiences would only give more in return we would act much better. But even when they won't respond won't assist, the actor must love them just the same.

As for tricks of expression, I use them, of course. All actors do, but I try to relate these tricks to life and so endeavor to make them seem natural. Finally, to do good work, an actor should sacrifice himself oftentimes to the total effect of the play. The day of peppering one a work with points and so glorifying one's self at the expense of the rounded appeal of a scene is over. "The play's the thing."

THE "GHOST BREAKER."

Another melodramatic-farce, "The Ghost Breaker," has been chosen by John Craig for his play of the week of May 11 at the Castle Square.

Nantasket Travel Is Improving

Early Spring travel, despite inclement weather conditions, is on the increase. Frederic L. Lane, general manager of the Nantasket Steamboat Company, predicts the busiest Spring season ever.

During the Winter the wharves of the company have undergone some great improvements, that the public may be served easier and to relieve the congestion at both the Boston and Nantasket ends of the line. The new ticket system has received any amount of commendation

In a short time a new schedule will go into effect, which will mean even better service to the beach, enabling the pleasure seekers to enjoy their Saturday afternoons of the Spring months at Nantasket.

Music Makers Off for Europe

With the close of the Symphony season last night the principal members of the orchestra are leaving town for the Summer. Dr. and Mrs. Muck leave Boston tomorrow and sail Tuesday morning on the Kaiser Wilhelm II On the same ship will be Mr. and Mrs Paderewski and the principal members of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York. The ship will carry the most valuable "cargo" of musicians that ever left New York.

Dr. Muck goes to Berlin and in mid-June will go to Bayreuth for the Summer, where he will conduct the festival performance of "Parsifal." He has given up the idea of conducting the Mozart Festival in Salzburg. Dr. and Mrs. Muck will return in the middle of September and will occupy their new home in the Fenway. The first rehearsal of the Fall is called unusually early, September 28, for on October last the orchestra leaves on a special western tour, which will carry them as far west as Kansas City It is the purpose to give eight or nine concerts before the opening of the regular season in Boston, October 16.

Mr. Urack, the assistant conductor of the orchestra, remains in Boston for the next three weeks as conductor of the Pop concerts. Mr. and Mrs Witek sail the end of this week for the Summer, and others who are sailing are Mr Longy, Mr. Ferir, Mr Noack, who expects to be gone only two months, and Mr. Otto Roth.

Amusements.

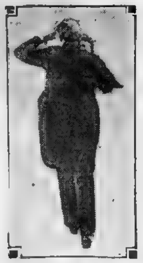
How to Dance the One-Step

Complete instructions written and illustrated for the SUNDAY AMERICAN by G. Hepburn Wilson, M. B. of the Salon de Danse, New York City—the foremost authority on modern dancing and one of the most brilliant and successful teachers of dancing in the United States.

The "One-Step"



Number 1

The One-Step is the popular successor of the original Turkey Trot. The action of this dance is very simple, but beautifully graceful and comes natural with little practice.

The time is two-four meter, usually a lively tune, with syncopated time.

The Easiest Way to Acquire the One-Step Rhythmic Swing.

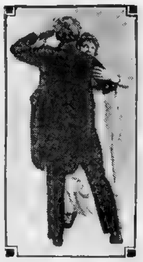
First start your "Grafonola" with either of the popular one-step records above referred to, and listen attentively to the time of the music until you can count one, two—one, two—one, two—one, two—in perfect time with the music.

First Movement

Without raising your feet off the floor, begin to shift your weight from the right foot to the left foot, counting ONE as you shift your weight to the left foot, and counting TWO as you shift your weight to the right foot. This will give you a slight swinging motion from side to side.

When you find you are able to get this swinging and shifting of weight from one foot to the other in perfect time to the music, you will have gained the first essential to the One-Step and you will by this time have sensed the secret of its success—its enthusiastic appeal to the joyous spirit

Second Movement



Number 2

(NOTE illustration number 1.) The partners are directly facing one another so that when the gentleman steps forward with his left foot the lady must step back with the right foot, and vice versa.

The elemental step of this dance is taking a single step to each beat of the measure. Now begin to move forward.

The gentleman, supporting the lady, starts with his left foot, walking briskly four or even eight steps forward, the lady starting with her right foot, walking backward. Then merely reverse the action, without losing time, by the gentleman walking backward and the lady forward. A little practice will enable the dancers to control their general direction around the room.

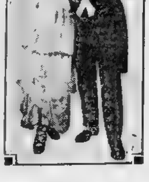
Remember:—One step to each count—One, two, etc. Should you fail to keep in continual harmony with the time of the music as you change from one foot to the other you will lose the joy of perfect harmony between bodily action and the time of the music, which is the correct interpretation of dancing.

Thoroughly practice and acquire the foregoing two movements with the record music.

NOTE:—The swinging of the body from side to side in keeping time with the music by shifting the weight from one foot to the other may be greatly exaggerated at first, but every effort should be made later to tone this action down to a minimum. This marks the difference between the One-Step and the old Turkey Trot. The old Turkey Trot was an exaggerated swinging of the body from one side to the other, and still more accentuated by throwing the feet out from side to side; but as more grace was acquired, the feet were kept close to the floor and the action of the body was reduced from a swinging and jumping movement to a gliding, waving effect of the body, without losing the subtle expression of the syncopated characteristics of the music, thus creating the new One-Step.

Number 3

I wish to emphasize the need of developing agility combined with grace and smoothness, not so smooth as to lose the AGILE spirit of the dance and not so much AGILITY as to lose the beauty of the GLIDING, WAVING grace of this fascinating modern Dance.



Number 4

In giving personal lessons in my studios, I neither advise nor do I adopt the method of teaching mere STEPS. Rhythmic bodily expression, or in other words, DANCING ABILITY, is the thing I teach. This can be acquired only by concentrating the MIND upon the MUSIC, in order that the most simple action may be at all times in harmony with the tempo and characteristics of the tune.

The illustrations furnished will assist the reader to accomplish a few of the many pretty popular variations of the One-Step, AFTER you have followed the instructions regarding the acquisition of perfect ease in harmonizing your motions with the time and swing of the music.

Number 5

Another variation may be accomplished by the lady and gentleman keeping their right feet close together, as shown in illustration No. 3, swing in a circular movement around each other with left feet, shifting weight alternately from right foot to left foot, keeping a smooth, graceful, rhythmic swing. This gives the TURNING STEP in this dance and is completed when the step is used four times.

A further variation is in OPEN POSITION (illustration No. 4). The gentleman starts with the left foot and the lady with the right foot, or in other words, the lady and gentleman both start with the OUTSIDE FOOT, and walk FOUR STEPS FORWARD, the fourth count being done with the inside foot. On the FIFTH STEP the two dancers turn inwardly, facing each other until they are facing in the opposite direction in such a manner as to bring them in the position (illustration No. 5). Repeat the same thing in this position: On count one, beginning with the outside foot (gentleman's right foot and lady's left foot) walking forward four steps and turning back to position (see illustration No. 4) on the fifth step. This step is called the STANDARD SQUARE.

The steps may also be varied by dipping or bending the knee on the EVEN COUNTS, in other words, the dip or bend of the knees is always done with the inside step. There are many other equally attractive variations, but the instruction thus far given is enough to insure an excellent appearance when dancing in public.

SOCIETY CHATTER by the DOWAGER

Miss Esther Foss, who has been the guest of her fiance's parents, Mr. and Mrs. David H. Purves, at the Ritz Carlton in Montreal, returned late in the week to her home in Jamaica Plain. Miss Foss went to Canada to spend three or four days, but was having such a thoroughly delightful time that her visit lengthened into two weeks. Teas, receptions and dances kept Miss Foss busy every moment during her stay. Mr Hickman, to whom Miss Foss' engagement was recently announced, is a native of Canada and has any number of friends there who were all anxious to entertain Miss Foss.

Mrs. Eugene N. Foss, mother of Miss Foss, is entertaining Mrs. Wilfred B. Chapman of California, mother of the bride of Benjamin S. Foss. There has been considerable entertaining in Mrs. Chapman's honor and several other affairs will be given for her before her departure for the West.

Miss Marie Miller, daughter of Albert Miller of No. 74 Kings- [illegible] part this Summer in many of the interesting events of the younger set. Miss Miller possesses a beauty which has been much remarked upon

A former Boston matron extensively entertained here and a hostess of note at her beautiful country home, "Coeur du Pays" in Petersham, Mrs. H. H. Fiske will undoubtedly be frequently seen and entertained during the Spring months here e'er the call of the country and the woods send her friends.

One of the buds of the Spring is Miss Jessie Sawyer, daughter of Mrs. V. Cary Sawyer of No. 128 Davis avenue, Brookline. Miss Sawyer, though just out, has attracted widespread attention on account of her beauty and charm. She will take part in many of the fashionable frivolities of the younger set.

CHATTER of SOCIETY

BY THE CHAPERONE

There is more than one ultra-exclusive family in Boston divided against itself—all on account of suffrage. One of the foremost of our matrons is a strong anti, while her daughter is among the strongest of the suffragettes. It is said that the mother was heard sarcastically asking the daughter if she intended to ride in the parade, and threatened that if she did she and all her friends would throw lemons at her.

One of the latest recruits from the fashionable set to the suffragettes is Mrs. Francis B. Boyer, who before her marriage was Katherine Gardner, a favorite niece of Mrs. Jack and one of the most interesting young leaders of her smart coterie. Mrs. Boyer of late has made her home in New Bedford, where her husband, who is a well known minister, is in charge of a prominent church. The Rev. Mr Boyer was formerl in charge of the Church of the Advent in Boston, and it was while doing charity work there that he met his wife. I saw Mrs Boyer in town a few days before the parade and she was looking most charming—her new interest seems to have given her new life and she looks younger than when she was married. Mrs. Boyer lead the New Bedford division of the [illegible] yesterday.

The studios are to be known as the Uriel Davis Dancing Studios and will be under his personal supervision.

The first in the series of dances was held in the Boulevard Bungalow at Everett square on Friday. They will be continued every Friday evening. The program, which was elaborate and under the personal direction of Mrs. Ralph Herrick, included the hesitation, one-step, tango, Maxixe, the lame duck and other popular dances of today.

Whims and Foibles of the Fashionables

The little curl which Miss Clara Endicott Sears, quite the wealthiest of all Boston's bachelor maids, wears dangling over her shoulder in the daytime as well as evening is most becoming, but more so in the evening when in decollete than in street attire.

I met Miss Sears the other afternoon when she was hurrying along Boylston street. She certainly presented an interesting picture, and more than one person turned to gaze after her.

Miss Sears makes her home with her mother, Mrs. Knyvet W. Sears, but of late has been turning the cold shoulder [illegible] and spreading [illegible] at the country [illegible] where she entertains her friends [illegible] for the most part [illegible] riding and driving [illegible] cross country with [illegible] dogs.

I saw Miss [illegible] evening at an [illegible] when she was especially [illegible] in a gown [illegible] large [illegible]. Her [illegible] right [illegible] her [illegible] carried [illegible] the appearance of some [illegible] just stepped from the [illegible] old-time picture.

Miss Sears [illegible] the way, is also spending [illegible] of her time [illegible] energy as well as her wealth, helping along those less fortunate [illegible] a score or more [illegible] philanthropies of which the outer world knows but little.

* * *

[illegible] the prettiest [illegible] most [illegible] young girl I have seen lately, [illegible] Sara Batchelder, who was such a favorite during her season, and who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs John L. Batchelder of Brookline.

Miss Batchelder is quite the beauty of her set, and when I saw her the other day she was wearing one of the latest cape coats, which she kept on all the time, and a chic little black hat tilted much to the right and showing enough of her hair to assure me that is was done according to the very latest French edict.

It was at the reception which Mrs. Lilla Viles Wyman gave in honor of Mr and Mrs. Castle at the Lenox that I caught my first glimpse of this beauty. She was surrounded every moment by an admiring group of friends. There was one young man especially devoted and I later saw them together at the Opera House, where the dancing competition was in order. Miss Batchelder, so I am told, is one of the most enthusiastic as well as one of the most popular tangoers of her set and is never lacking partners galore.

* * *

Miss Eleonora Sears has been devoting her time and much of her fortune to charity. She is most devoted to her grandfather Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, and spends hours with him each day. He is quite as devoted to her and they are the best of chums. Usually, twice a day, Miss Sears visits him at his Dartmouth street home.

* * *

I saw Mrs. Hollis White the other day in a hotel foyer as she sat chatting with friends, and I couldn't help marvelling at her extremely girlish appearance. She is not old, by any means, but not having seen her for some time, I was taken aback upon seeing her looking younger than in her girlhood days, when she was considered quite a belle.

She wore a chic suit of black, with deep rolling collar, caught low at the neck with a black four-in-hand tie. Her hat was a chic little affair, also of black. Mrs. White has just returned from New York and is to sail for Europe May 7.

* * *

Among the many young women who are always on the line of progress is Miss Caro Coburn, who informs me that she is now in her second year of law study. Miss Coburn, who is well known socially as well as in various club circles, I saw the other afternoon with a group of friends. She was decidedly attractive in a black suit with black hat, the crown of which was covered with pink roses. A [illegible] osprey plume adorned the left side.

* * *

"Come on, 'fess up, Louise," her sister buds and fellow singers in the chorus of the Vincent Club show were saying to pretty Louise Converse when I passed a group of them in the foyer on the day of the rehearsal. But while some of her girl friends seem to take the affair for granted, winsome Louise keeps her own counsel and is apparently not going to divulge anything until the proper time comes.

Miss Converse's engagement to James Spencer Morgan, son of J. P. Morgan, is still being persistently rumored and quite as persistently denied, but it is whispered that the announcement is being withheld until Harvard Class day, when so many Harvard students and society girls choose to make their intentions known.

I saw Miss Converse and her distinguished-appearing mother on the street a couple of days before the rumor was started. Mrs Converse looking especially well, all in the smartest of black attire, and her daughter in dark blue and a girlish hat of the same in Watteau effect and trimmed with tiny rose buds.

Miss Converse was presented at a reception and tea early in the season and ever since has been well to the fore among the most popular girls of the bud set. She is petite and full of life and possesses a remarkably fine singing voice.

She does all the modern dances wonderfully well and is never, like so many of the girls of her set, left out for want of partners. She has admirers by the score but it's the general opinion among those who know her best that young Morgan is quite possibly the accepted one.

* * *

It happened to see the Sam Feltons at an evening affair recently and to say the least the bride was not looking radiantly happy. She was evidently quite peeved over something, and her stalwart young husband, between trying to listen to what the young lady on his left was saying, and to cheer his wife, was kept busy and looked none too comfortable. Mrs. Felton before her marriage last Fall was Anne Nelson, one of the popular buds of a year ago, and their engagement was announced on class-day. For some time after their wedding they made their home in Philadelphia, but have recently come to Boston to reside as Mr Felton's business interests are now centered here.

Mrs. Felton on that evening wore one of the prettiest gowns of her trousseau, a clinging creation of torquois blue satin trimmed with chiffon and given a pretty touch by a large pink rose, worn at the corsage. Many delightful things have been done for the Feltons since their return to town and Mrs. Felton is said to be among the most delightful hostesses of the very young married set.

In the World of Society

There have been many Bostonians in New York the past week and among those registered at the McAlpin were Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Astell, Roger Pease, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Edwards and Mrs. C. E. Aldrich. Miss Harriet C. Cowles, who is in New York for a short stay, has joined friends at the McAlpin.

Weddings By the Chaperone

One of the brilliant weddings of the post-Easter season was that in Attleboro on Wednesday of Miss Ruth Agnes French, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Herbert French, and William Converse Chick, Harvard, '05, son of Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Chick of Beacon street, Boston.

The ceremony, which was a decidedly brilliant one, took place in the First Universalist Church at 8 o'clock, and was performed by the Rev. Ralph Connor of Gardner, assisted by the Rev. Carl Henry.

The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion with palms and Easter lilies, while the guest pews were topped with baskets of snapdragons.

Miss French, who wore a handsome gown of white satin, with tri garnitures of point applique, was escorted to the altar and given in marriage by her father.

The bride had for her maid of honor, Miss Eleanor Boyd, and the bridesmaids were Miss Roberta Rouse of Baltimore, Marjorie Edwards of Chicago, Isabel Ramage of Oil City, Pa., Emma Austin of New York, Helen Whiting and Alice Gilbert of North Attleboro. They were gowned alike in pink taffeta with old rose trains and girdles of satin and garnitures of shadow lace. Each carried a bouquet of pink roses. The gown worn by the maid of honor was fashioned the same as those worn by the bridesmaids, the only difference being that hers was elaborately trimmed with silver lace. The two little flower girls, the Misses Mary Billard of Boston and Adelaid Chambers of Mt. Vernon, N. Y., carried gold baskets filled with rose petals, which they scattered in the path of the bride and groom.

Following the ceremony a reception took place at the residence of the bride's parents, which was gay with masses of greenery and American beauty roses, while the garage, where the supper was served, was transformed into a bower of greenery, interspersed with snapdragons.

The young couple ware assisted in receiving by their respective parents. Mrs. French wore a beautiful gown of blue chiffon, with painted flowers and garnitures of shadow lace, and Mrs. Chick, mother of the bridegroom, was attractive in pale green silk, with overdress of embroidered and pailletted tulle.

The ushers at the reception were George Edwin Peters, who was best man at the ceremony, James O. Foss, W. Morton Bunting, Thomas A. Whidden, Frank M. Sawtelle, Royal G. Whiting, Robert S. Burgess, John B. Fallon and J. Newton Smith.

The bride's going-away gown was of blue serge, with Roman trimmings. The young couple will spend their honeymoon in the South, and will pass the Summer at Clifton, returning to Boston to reside in the Autumn.

There is much interest in the wedding on May 16 of J. Griswold Webb and Anne P. Rogers. Mr. Webb gave his farewell bachelor dinner at the Copley Plaza last night, and it was all and more than his friends had dared hope, in the way of lavishness.

The wedding is to take place at St. James Church at 12 30 o'clock, and following the ceremony the guests will be conveyed to the country home of Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Rogers, parents of the bride, and luncheon will be served. The church being small, the number asked there is limited, but there will be many more at the reception and luncheon.

The bride is to have for her attendants Mrs. Kenneth B. Schley, her sister, and for her bridesmaids, Margaret E. Trevor, Katherine Colt, Miss Sara Delano and Miss Ruth Wales. Miss Elizabeth S. Rogers, a niece of the bride, will be flower girl.

The bridegroom will have for his attendants his brother, H. Walter Webb, who will be best man, and Herman L. Rogers, Gordon H. Balch, Carleton Burr, H. Curtis Dewey, Darragh A. Park, Samuel M. Delton, Jr., Charles H. Davis, John S. Parker, Henry B. Gardner, Vanderbilt Webb, George von L. Meyer, Jr., Henry P. McKean, Chester G. Burden, Walter Tufts, Jr., Frederick Parker, Jr., and Thomas H. Frothingham, all Harvard men.

An interesting April wedding was that of Miss Alice Chesley Merrill, Wellesley 1913, daughter of Mrs. Caro Merrill of Waltham, to George Wallace Lewis, son of Mr and Mrs. Henry H. Lewis, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. George J. Barker, No. 42 Prospect street, Waltham, last Wednesday evening. The bride was given away by her mother and the Rev. Francis E. Webster, rector of Christ's Episcopal Church, performed the ceremony. Miss Marion P. Pendleton, Wellesley '17, of Ilesboro, Me., was maid of honor, and Hugh Nawn, Harvard '10, was best man. A reception followed the ceremony, after which the couple left on their honeymoon tour. Mr. and Mrs Lewis will reside at No. 13 Stockton street, Dorchester, after September 1.

The following were the ushers: William E. Hearn, Harvard 1910, of Roxbury; Merrick F. Stark and J. Harold Pike of Waltham, and William H. Saltmarsh, Boston. Assistants: Dr. Roland MacKenzie, Dorothy Clark, Wellesley 1913, of Newton; Eva Richardson, Pelham, N. H.; Gladys Lemont, Irma Douglas and Marion Rowe of Waltham; Elna Trowbridge, West Newton.

HERE AND THERE IN SOCIETY

By THE BARONESS

In spite of the decidely unpleasant weather, the usual Spring exodus is commencing in earnest. Those who own Summer homes are opening them up and those who do not are making preparations to rent the many desirable places that abound all around Boston, if you may judge by the attractions set forth in the advertisements, and every steamer carries a full passenger list to Europe already. Among the earlier departure, Mrs. Roland Gray has moved her pretty little family to Wellesley Hills. Mrs. James Lowell Putnam has returned from visiting New York and will go to Bar Harbor.

* * *

Miss Nevin and Mr. Loud gave a most charming recital at the house of the Misses Kelly on Trail street, Cambridge, and many Boston, Brookline and Cambridge people enjoyed it. Among the music lovers present were Mrs. Edmund C. Abbott, Mrs. John Fiske, Mrs. R. H. Dana, Mrs. Astor Carey, Mrs. Walter Wesselhoeft, Mrs. Godfrey Cabot. More men than is usual at a musical gathering were there.

Rev. Edwin H. van Etten, curate of Trinity Church since his graduation from the Episcopal Theological School in 1911, has received a call to the rectorship of Christ Church, New York city. This parish is located at Broadway and Seventy-first street. Its recent rector was Rev. George Alexander Strong, D. D., who years ago was connected with St. Paul's Church (now the Cathedral), and later was rector of St. Paul's Church, Brockton.

* * *

This is the third call to a large parish that Mr. van Etten has had since being at Trinity. At present he is in New York, where his family resides. It is thought probable that he will accept this call. Should this be the case, he will be very deeply missed in Boston, where his work has been far-reaching.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rice of Turner Hill, Ipswich, announce the engagement of their daughter to Frederick Ayer, Jr., of Commonwealth avenue and Avalon, Pride's Crossing. The young couple, who are both lovers of outdoor life, will be married in the Summer and settle down here.

The event of the week was, of course, the entertainment given by the Vincent Club and during the two matinees and the evening performance "All Boston" saw it, that is, all feminine Boston. The sterner set was excluded. A more dignified show was never seen, and it did the greatest credit not only to Miss Hemenway, who wrote the operetta aptly named "Pandora," but to every one who co-operated in making this a very great success, both artistically and financially.

* * *

The Gavotte in the first act with German's tuneful music, the delightful dancing of Miss Jordan and the exquisite ballet of the third act, all prove that dancing is taking a more and more serious hold on society.

Few professionals can beat the easy grace of Miss Jordan, and despite what seemed a little like nervousness occasionally displayed by Miss Marie D. Ames, as "Hope" her posing and dancing were really wonderful in grace and charm.

Dr. Killum was extremely funny and his allusions apt when one remembers who Mrs. G. Hall Roosevelt was the daughter of.

The drill and band of the British Grenadiers was excellent in the extreme and met with the applause it deserved. They were a credit to Miss Isabelle Florence, Mr. Richard Lansing and Mr. W. R. Gibbs, who had very wonderful material apparently to work with.

Chatter of Society by the Dowager

The all important event during the early week was the dancing competition at the Opera House and the exhibition by the Castles. Society was out in force at both the afternoon and evening performances and one might judge from the well-filled house that the fashionables prefer tango to opera—for it's true that seldom, if ever, at any opera performance has the house been so packed.

Among the most interesting of our fashionables who watched the performance with interest were: Mrs. John C. Fairchild, who never looked lovelier than in her gown of black satin and chiffon with shoulder straps of chiffon and brilliants and a large pink rose tucked in the fluff of the chiffon on the bodice. Mrs. Fairchild was with Miss Dorothy Jordan, who had been in the receiving line with Mrs. Wyman at the Castle reception earlier in the day, and with Mrs. Robert Jordan.

Another wonderfully distinguished figure in black was Mrs. Henry Staples Potter, who is always conspicuous for her tasteful gowning and the superb manner in which she carries her gowns. Mrs. Potter, who is much interested in tangoing, and her niece, Mrs. Snyder, were together. Mrs. Potter was in black satin with a few well placed diamonds and Mrs. Snyder also in black.

Black seemed the favorite with the fashionables, and it was the color Mrs. Gordon Abbott also chose for the occasion. Mrs Abbott was in black satin and had with her Miss Ethel Gibson, who wore a most becoming gown of old rose satin and chiffon and a long red velvet coat.

Mrs. John L. Thorndike chaperoned a party of young people, including her clever daughter Alice, who is looking wonderfully fit after her long siege of rehearsing for the Vincent Club show and the Misses Margaret and Grace Stackpole. Mrs. Thorndike was in black and Miss Alice wore a most becoming gown of pale blue satin and chiffon. Miss Margaret Stackpole was in peacock blue satin and Miss Grace in old rose satin and chiffon.

Mrs. William A. Gaston, who entertained several of her daughter Ruth's young friends at dinner and later chaperoned them at the exhibition, was in black satin prettily draped with black chiffon.

Miss Mary Josephine Amory and Miss Barbara Burr went together, Miss Amory wearing a most becoming frock of black chiffon trimmed with brilliants and Miss Burr in a gown of white satin with minaret of black chiffon edged with pink roses.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Henry Higginson entertained an interesting party of guests in their box, Mrs. Higginson wearing a simple though most becoming gown of pale blue satin and chiffon and a long velvet coat.

Miss Amy Lowell was among the early arrivals and wore a gown of dark gray satin.

Miss Mary Fay, who went with her sister, Mrs. Motley, was in white chiffon, accordion pleated, and white satin.

Mrs. A. Lincoln Filene was in black velvet, with which she wore a long dark blue velvet coat.

Miss Alice Sargent was in black satin and came with her mother who was also in black.

Miss Josephine Rantoul, who was with several of her young friends, was in white satin and white chiffon.

Mrs. Robert Winthrop Knowles, who before her recent marriage was Amy Thorp, was among the brides present and wore a most becoming gown of black satin and chiffon. Her sister, Miss Erica Thorp, was in pale blue satin and their mother, Mrs. Joseph G. Thorp, was in black.

Miss Margaret Thomas, who was quite the beauty of the evening and who has taken to the newest style of hair dressing, which by the way is most becoming, was in delft blue satin, over which she wore a long red velvet evening coat.

Mrs. Barrett Wendell, Jr., was most attractive in blue satin and chiffon. With her was Miss Elizabeth Gray, in white satin.

Mrs. Knyvet W. Sears and her daughter, Clara, were among the early arrivals. Mrs. Sears was looking handsomer than ever in lavender satin, trimmed with rare old lace. Miss Sears was in gray satin.

That the reception which Mrs. Lilla Viles Wyman gave Monday in the Palm Room of the Hotel Lenox in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle was a success one could not doubt when one saw the decidedly distinguished throng of fashionables attending.

Mrs. Wyman was assisted in receiving by Miss Dorothy Jordan and Miss Marie Ames, both solo dancers in the forthcoming Vincent Club show, while the ushers, also Vincent Club girls were Louise Dixon, Hilda Foster, Louise Whiting, Dorothy Howard, Grace Lockwood, Helen Bullard, Mrs. Manfred Bowditch, Lucy Cabot, Rachel Warren, Madeline Harding and Anne Stedman.

Mrs. Wyman wore a handsome old rose and white, the slashed skirt filled in with accordion plaited purple chiffon which also extended to the shoulder on one side. Her hat was of ecrue straw, trimmed with brown ribbon and pale pink roses. Miss Ames was attractive in a suit of dark blue cloth and small black hat, while Miss Jordan was in a chic and extremely smart suit of dark blue, with short jacket and flounced skirt and a small blue hat trimmed with several plaits of black wings, giving a decidedly chic and smartly tailored appearance.

Mrs. Castle, who wore a checked suit and whose hat was one of the small black affairs which set on the side of the head showing the French roll, was most attractive. She carried a cane and had with her her pet Pekinese. She left early in order to be at the Opera House, where the competition was held.

Among those noted at the reception were Mrs. Ernest Fenollosa in black with black hat; Mrs. H. Staples Potter of Commonwealth avenue in a suit of black with black lacquered straw hat, trimmed with black lacquered ribbon; her niece, Mrs. Snyder, in black, with trimmings of buff, and small black hat; Miss Batchelder, black with small black hat; Mrs. A. Andrews Hawley, black and white check trimmed with black, hat of delft blue, trimmed with black feather and pink rose buds; Miss Eleanora Sears in black; Elizabeth Porter dark gray suit and delft blue hat trimmed with black quills; Frances Porter, dark brown and small black hat; Mrs. Lucius M. Sargent, black suit with black hat trimmed with black; Baroness Posse, checked suit with black hat and Mrs. Sharpe, in purple cloth.

On Sunday evening Mrs. Wyman opened her studio on Boylston street when the dancing teachers of Boston were entertained by Mrs. Wyman and the Castles and Mr. Castle practically gave a two hours' dancing demonstration, dancing with Mrs. Wyman, Miss Burnham and Miss Souther.

The last of the Hubbard Opera Talks for the present season was given on April 30 by Havrah Hubbard of the Boston Opera House, assisted by Floyd M. Baxter, pianist. During the season just ended, Mr. Hubbard gave no less than 253 presentations of opera, these representing 320 opera talks, which were given within a period of 186 consecutive days—from October 27, 1913, to April 30, 1914. "Good Night, Babette," and "Pierrot of the Minute" were the two plays elected by Miss Marie Ware Laughton of the School of English Speech and Expression in the Pierce Building, as graduation features to most aptly depict the histrionic powers of a group of her girl graduates. A good-sized crowd of fashionable guests witnessed and encored the two playlets, given last Wednesday evening.

Among the members of the casts were Miss Millicent Melrose, who recently scored a hit in the "Pirates of Penzance," Miss Elvira Rhind, whose clever dancing has won her wide praise, Miss Eola Smith, Miss Emma Jordan and Harry Ray.

CHATTER of SOCIETY
BY THE CHAPERONE

The Vincent Club girls may now rest easy on their laurels for they won them this year if ever they did and after weeks of strenuous rehearsing its all over at last and they will scatter like the wind in all directions in search of rest and recreation.

The play this year, "A Modern Pandora" by Hetty Hemenway was decidedly clever and the dancing and the drill were never better and never more cleverly done.

The play represents a modern Pandora. As in the classic myth a mysterious chest is entrusted by the mischief-loving Mercury, which part was done most cleverly by Rose Saltonstall to Pandora, which Miss Mary Hemenway in her Kate Greenaway costume did with much talent. Pandora is supposed to be a child in the golden age of innocence, whose curiosity induces her to open the box, from which the allegorical troubles of the world make their escape. So in this play the nineteenth century Pandora, living in a more sophisticated generation, and more enterprising than her companions, likewise allows her curiosity to get the better of her, in spite of the warnings of her more prudent minded playmate, Epimetheus, which part was taken by Charlotte Baylies. Naturally all sorts of troubles follow when, in spite of the warnings that "Curiosity killed a cat," Pandora proceeds to lift the lid.

Out of the chest this time troop only up-to-date troubles, however, and all in the guise of twentieth century novelties, typified by the spirit of modern extravagance. The nineteenth century Pandora is overwhelmed and horrified and closes the lid. At Mercury's suggestion, however, she opens the lid once more and this time, as in the classical legend, Hope with her rainbow spirit attendants, make their appearance. They quickly dispel the evil spirits, and by their radiant presence bring comfort and consolation. Hope in the person of Miss Marie Ames, who danced divinely, promises to atone for the troubles of the world, and assures Pandora that there is still hope even for the present generation.

The whole play gives one the idea that the girls of wealth and the very youngest of them can see the humorous side of their extravagances. Perhaps this is what their various classes in sociology have done for them. In the words of Mary Hemenway who took the part of Miss Fussbud the constant cry of the debutantes is:

"Oh! buy me some dresses please Ma—
I cannot go out in these Ma,
I declare they are too duddy, much too duddy
They will be a freeze Mama
Oh, Ma buy me please a harem skirt—
[illegible] on my [illegible] cannot hurt
You know I must be dressed
Every evening [illegible]
Now I'm ready out you must Oh! please Mama

Dr. Killum, as played by Mrs. Gracie Hall Roosevelt, and Officer Ketchum, as Ruth Harrington played it, were two of the most laughable and amusing features. Dr. Killum was attired in a much too spacious suit of gray and black plaid trousers, a black prince albert, high silk hat and whiskers, while the winsome Miss Harrington would never be recognized, even by her most intimate friends, in her complete policeman's attire.

Miss Dorothy Jordan, in her chic little costume of white satin bloomers and wired and pointed skirt of black velvet, received no end of applause. She was seen in a different sort of a dance than she usually gives. The entire cast for the play was as follows.

Among the many interesting songs of the play were the Hobble Chorus, the Social Workers' Chorus and the lines regarding Dr. Killum, which were as follows:

"He's a surgeon of the first degree
He'll charge the very largest fee;
He is a specialist on multi-millionaires,
And on those that give themselves the greatest airs
He takes an appendix out so nice
And gains a fortune in a trice
Oh, if everyone were wealthy as John D.
What a very rich man he would be."

HOBBLE CHORUS.

Hobble, bobble, little flirt
In your one-piece X-ray skirt.
Each policeman you get by
Must have cinders in his eyes
Lots of things detract from you,
P[illegible] has reactions, too
You won't long stay what you are,
You have gone a bit too far.

And [illegible] care to see

Are as worthy as they can be
Oh! won't you lend a helping hand

Among those attending the Vincent Club show during the week were Miss Dorothy Forbes, a former president, who always has the club's best interests at heart, and who was wearing a mode cloth suit and smart black hat piled high with lacquered black ribbon; Mrs. Oliver Turner, in purple cloth and small black straw hat, Miss Mary Josephine Amory, black cloth suit and black hat; Miss Eleonora Sears, who was at the rehearsal, black short skirted suit and sailor-shaped black straw hat; Mrs. W. D. Sohier, in black, and Miss Eleanor Sohier, in dark blue suit and black hat; Mrs. Thomas Motley and Mrs. Thomas Motley, Jr., both in black; Miss Ella Lyman, also a former president, dark blue cloth and small black hat trimed with pink rosebuds; Miss Elizabeth Porterm, dark gray cloth suit and small sailor-shaped hat of dark blue straw, trimmed with lighter shades of blue; Mrs. Eben D. Jordan, in black with black hat; Miss Mary Fay, dark blue cloth suit and chic hat of blue straw; Mrs. Bayard Warern, black; Miss Alice Sargent, dark blue with blue sailor-shaped hat; Mrs. Robeson Sargent, black, Miss Nina Burnham, dark gray cloth and black has; Mrs. Robert Stevension, black, Mrs. S. Mrs. Francis L. Higginson, Jr., was among the most interested of the spectators at the Vincent Club rehearsal on Tuesday afternoon when I saw her with her young family in one of the back seats. Mrs. Higginson looked especially well in a gown of tape cloth which was made up with the same shade of soutache braid, and the relief in the color scheme was an excellent one as her hat was in the deepest shades of red and trimmed in the lighter shades of red ostrich plumes. Her waist was white lingerie trimmed in Irish lace insertions.

◆ ◆ ◆

Speaking of the rehearsal, I was never so amused as to overhear the conversation between Miss Phyllis Sears, the debutante daughter of Herbert M. Sears, and a younger sister of Mrs. Bayard Warren—(Elizabeth Sears)—and Miss Dorothy Forbes, especially as young Miss Sears, who is so noted for her wit, was giving her ideas of the discomfort which was incurred in male attire as she literally fell into a suit after the successful drill in which she was among the fifers. Evidently from what I gathered there had been a rife discussion at home as "to be or not to be" regarding milady's wearing suspenders and her father, evidently, and largely from personal experience, decided that it "was so to be" with his attractive daughter. Be that as it may, Miss Sears did not hesitate to voice her sentiments in decided tones that she would never wear suspenders again as long as she lived, although she admitted they were quite essential to the looks of the costume. She immediately tore off her wig to be comfortable and one could not blame her as the powdered hair over one's own is anything but comfortable, and I noticed that Miss Josephine Rantoul, who led the drill, was, with her wig in her hand, sitting on the stair to enjoy the rest of the show and certainly looked [illegible] but comfortable in [illegible] fitting "togs."

◆ ◆ ◆

Miss Dorothy Jordan, I understand, who was by far one of the smartest features of the performance, was remarkably lucky as her costume was loaned her by Miss Edith Deacon of New York, and as it fitted to perfection there was absolutely not alteration necessary. Miss Jordan was quite the envy of all the club members who had been "hustling" for hours on their respective costumes.

◆ ◆ ◆

I never saw so many exquisite family jewels brought into play as I did this year at the performance of "Pandora's Box," when on Wednesday afternoon the first performance called out society en masse. Miss Miriam Sears fairly scintillated with jewels the other afternoon with her fascinating pale green gown of chiffon over white satin. Her pearls, which reached nearly to her waist and encircled her throat twice, were marvels of art. On her corsage, too, she wore a superb brooch of emeralds and diaomnds, set in the old-fashioned dull silver filigree effect, together with a number of tiny diamonds.

◆ ◆ ◆

I hear that the recent fancy dress dance which Mr. and Mrs. Larz Anderson gave at their home in Washington was by far one of the smartest affairs which has been given at the capital for some moons, the favors being largely those souvenirs which the Andersons brought home from their trip to the Orient. They were really beautiful in almost every instance, as they represented a small fortune. The handsomest that came to this city, of which Mrs. Rockwood Hoar of Beacon street is the happy possessor, as she was among the invited guests, is a beautifully carved Japanese fan, the sticks of which are of sandal wood and the feathers those of the peacock coloring and shaded to a pure white. The long ribbon streamers on it are of turquoise blue satin charmeuse ribbons and tied in a huge bow, the entire affair being worn about the neck and hanging nearly to the hem of the gown.

Mrs. Hoar, I understand, was elegantly gowned in white satin and old lace, the latter representing a small fortune. She had, too, the distinction of adding greatly to the success of the affair, as her daughter, Miss Frances Hoar, who was with her, was easily voted among the handsomest and most attractive girls of the younger set at the dance.

Miss Hoar, by the way, is among the cleverest of the amateur dancers, and with young and clever Vinton Friedley is among the talent which the cabaret show of tomorrow evening offers at the Copley-Plaza at the benefit performance of the Home for Crippled Children.

Their dances are extremely attractive and decidedly new and last but by no means least, they are varied. Their dances include an old-fashioned minuet, song with dance, and a ragtime song of "Camp Meeting," said by those who have been fortunate enough to be asked for tea at the rehearsals to be one of the cleverest bits that any of the smart set have offered in some time. The third song in their numbers has never been done here, and as it comes from the other side of the water it seems but fair not to divulge the secret.

◆ ◆ ◆

Mrs. Gordon Prince of Beacon street, who is one of the best "groomed" of the smart set of Boston matrons, is looking especially well this Spring. I happened to meet her at one of the largest luncheons of the week at one of the most fashionable of the houses in the Back Bay, and I never saw her looking better. Mrs. Prince, who almost always wears black, was this particular day in a gown of black satin brocade. The bodice had a very deep guimpe of transparent white lace and satin, and at her neck she wore a diamond valliere. The coat worn with the gown was of black satin braid over white satin, so that the effect in black and white was very stunning. She wore a wide scarf of black liberty satin, lined in white satin, and the skirt of the black satin brocade was en traine and much fuller than they have been wearing this Winter. Her hat was very becoming in the shape of a high-crowned black velvet, one trimmed in a huge white ostrich plume which entirely covered the side of the narrow rolling brim and fell well over her beautiful white hair. In her ears sparkled some stunning diamond earrings.

At White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., the Boston colony was augmented by the arrival of several prominent families. Bishop Thomas F. Davies of Springfield, who arrived at the Greenbrier early in the week, is taking the "kur" at the Kurhaus.

One of the smart weddings of the season was that of Miss Beatrice Batchelder, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. C. Batchelder of No. 1352 Beacon street, to Duncan Wright at the Brookline All Saint's Episcopal Church. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Daniel Delaney Addison at 12 o'clock noon, April 22, following which a breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents.

The young couple are now in Bermuda on their honeymoon.

The best man was John G. Wright, while the maid of honor was Miss Anna T. Piehler. Miss Batchelder was in white crepe meteor with old duchess lace and carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and orchids. Miss Piehler was attired in yellow charmeuse with a brown chiffon hat and carried Aaron Ward roses and forget-me-nots.

The bridesmaids were: Miss Louise Braune, Miss Helen Wright, Miss Anna Norcross and Miss Helen Ruhe attired in ecru lace gowns, tourquoise blue taffeta coats and ecru lace hats, with pink and blue roses and carrying Aaron Ward roses tied with blue gauze ribbons. After June 1 the couple will reside at No. 343 Crafts street, Newtonville.

Gowns and Gems Society is Wearing

I happened to see Miss Juliet Higginson of Beacon street, daughter of Francis L. Higginson, the other day. She has just returned from Bermuda with Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Richardson of Charles River Village, and she is as tanned as if she had been spending a Summer at her North Shore home.

Miss Higginson looked especially smart in a gown of the deepest shade of blue taffeta silk. The skirt, of walking length, was done in the triple tunic effect and edged with a narrow band of black satin. The bodice, which had the Dutch neck effect, was trimmed with quantities of cream lace, the latter forming a high ruche at the neck. The collar was wired so that it stood very high, and was softened with wide revers which extended down each side of the waist to the belt, which was a deep girdle of black satin charmeuse with huge bows and short ends at the back.

With this creation Miss Higginson wore a stunning hat of the latest dressed straw in very dark blue. It was in the [illegible] crowned Tam o'Shanter effect, turned well up in the [illegible] and worn very far down over the right ear. The under trimming at the back was of [illegible] satin ribbon and a single pale pink rose, while the crown had only a band of the blue ribbon encircling it. The front trimming was decidedly chic, as it was only when the head was lifted that one could see a tiny pale pink rosebud nestling under the brim against the hair. A splendid string of pearls with a small diamond clasp was the only ornament she wore.

◆ ◆ ◆

Mrs. "Willie" P. Fay, whom I happened to see motoring into town from her suburban residence, "The Hundreds," at Wellesley Hills, was looking very well the other afternoon. She was all in black except for a bit of color on her hat, a style which becomes her wealth of white, wavy hair, which is always immaculately dressed. Later the same day I saw her shopping, and noticed that the gown was of broadcloth, trimmed with row upon row of soutache braid on both the skirt and short, jaunty coat. The skirt was of walking length and fuller than last season's style. The hat was very attractive. It was of black straw, with a high crown and trimmed with a large bunch of black ostrich plumes. She wore a black feather boa tied with long black satin ribbon bow and ends.

◆ ◆ ◆

I understand that Mrs. Frank Spalding and her son Evans, who, with Mr. Spalding, have been making their home at the Copley-Plaza this Winter, will soon sail for Europe to spend the Summer. I happened to catch a glimpse of Mrs. Spalding the other afternoon as she was leaving the hotel to attend a reception. She looked particularly smart in a gown of an exquisite shade of dark blue crepe de chine of walking length. With it she wore a deep tunic of beautiful deep cream lace. The neck was in the Dutch effect, but the most stylish part of the bodice was the high Medici lace collar, so wired that it stood fully five or six inches high. She wore no jewels except a small string of pearls. Mrs. Spalding's hat was almost entirely of lace, with a severely plain white wing which covered almost entirely the left side of the rolling brim.

Miss Dorothy Forbes of Commonwealth avenue is one of the most enthusiastic motorists among the fairer sex. She is as much at home in her runabout as most men are at the wheels of their touring cars. I saw her spinning up Commonwealth avenue the other morning with her chauffeur and it did not seem ten minutes later that I caught a glimpse of her behind a high-stepping blue ribbon trotter. She looked very smart, and although it was cold, she was not enveloped in a raccoon coat one usually sees her in. She was very "Springy" in a stunning tailored suit of French blue cloth. The coat was devoid of trimming except for a stitched collar and narrow velvet revers of the goods. She wore a straw hat of a lighter shade of blue trimmed with large "windmill" bows of taffeta ribbon and a band of black velvet on the low crown. Her tailored waist was of white silk. With it she wore a sailor collar and soft tie of pale blue silk. Her gloves were of bright yellow kid, stitched in white.

◆ ◆ ◆

I ran into Mrs. Lucius M. Sargent at the Copley-Plaza the other afternoon. She was exquisitely dressed in a gown of soft clinging black liberty silk. The bottom of the softly draped overskirt was edged with a narrow band of black satin encrusted with tiny cut steel and silver sequins. The bodice was also of liberty silk and had a deep, square, transparent neck of white silk net, which was edged with the cut steel and silver trimming. The sleeves, which were in the "angel" lines, were edged with the same kind of braiding.

Mrs. Sargent wore a chain of small diamonds set in platinum which reached well below her waist. At her throat sparkled a pendant of amethysts and diamonds on a narrow gold chain. Her hat was a becoming turban shaped straw, trimmed with two huge jetted black wings, which fell over the back of the hat to the neck of the coiffure. Her wrap was a beautiful one of sealskin, which reached nearly to the hem of her gown and was finished in a band of marten, which also formed the deep collar and revers.

◆ ◆ ◆

Speaking of black reminds me that few young women look as well in that color as Miss Dorothy Bolles of Commonwealth avenue, whom I happened to see the other [illegible] on her way to a reception.

Miss Bolles, who is a brunette with large brown eyes, wore a princess gown of black panne velvet [illegible]. The bodice was composed principally of exquisite duchesse lace, which formed the deep yoke and the deep undersleeves, which reached to the elbows, where they were caught with bows and ends of narrow black velvet ribbon. The hat was one of the most attractive I have seen this Spring. It was a black turban of the finest hemp straw, trimmed with a long French blue ostrich plume, which was fastened at the front with a tiny bunch of pale pink rosebuds and their foliage, as well as a small knot of forget-me-nots. The wrap Miss Bolles wore was a long grey one of broadcloth, trimmed with black velvet and lined with white satin.

◆ ◆ ◆

Miss Margaret Thomas, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Washington B. Thomas of Commonwealth avenue, and who since her severe illness of typhoid fever has grown decidedly slighter, never, it seemed to me, looked handsomer than she does this Spring. I happened to see her the other day getting out of her motor with Mrs. Thomas at a large reception. She was a "dream" in one of the most becoming gowns I have seen her wear in many moons. I refer to a princess gown of the fashionable mustard color thin brocaded crepe de chine which was done in the conventional vine design. The bodice was especially plain. The waist had a narrow band of lace of a dull bronze shade, outlining the garniture and the low Dutch neck. The girdle of the gown was of the most brilliant shade of cerise satin charmeuse, and was fully five or six inches in width, which added materially to Miss Thomas' height. The skirt was en traine and had a narrow ruffle of the brown lace, which was very full and at a distance so much so that it had the effect of a ruche. Her hat with this costume was a large Panama straw trimmed in wide flat loops and bows of cerise satin, and a high bow at the front of the hat, which had the wide brim with the under-trimming of the same shade of satin ribbon. She wore elbow gloves of white glace kid, and a neck-piece of brown tulle completed a very stunning effect. Miss Thomas, who has a wealth of black hair, had it dressed most becomingly in Spanish effect, as it was very high and loose with combs in it, and at the lobe of the left ear was a large curl which has become so much in vogue this season.

◆ ◆ ◆

Miss Juliet Higginson, a daughter of Mr. Francis L. Higginson of Beacon street, who has just returned from an extended trip to Bermuda with Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Richardson, is looking wonderfully well and, of course, very much tanned, which is extremely becoming, what with her dark coloring. I saw Miss Higginson the other day with Mrs. Richardson, when she was wearing a very smart new Spring costume in the deepest shade of blue taffeta silk. The dress was in the one-piece effect and the bodice, which had the square Dutch neck, was finished in a deep ruche of cream lace which was well wired at the back of the neck, so that it stood high and fell softly over the front of the waist on either side of the wide revers of the taffeta. The dress had a wide side girdle of the same material, with a huge bow at the neck which came fully as high as the shoulders. The most striking feature of the costume was the hat which Miss Higginson wore, and was by far one of the most stylish I have seen this Spring. It was of the same shade of dark blue and the [illegible] crown was rolled so high at the back that the [illegible] of the quantity [illegible] roses was tremen[illegible] against the very dark shade of straw. The hat [illegible] so far over the right side at the front that it was [illegible] distinguish who was [illegible] the head was [illegible] and the most chic [illegible] the bit of French [illegible] was the fact that a very [illegible] pale pink silk rose was [illegible] under the front brim which could only be discovered unless the head was raised. A wide band of dark blue ribbon trimmed the low crown of the hat. The skirt was very Frenchy in the model, as it had the wide full ruffle which fell nearly to the knees and was finished in a band of black satin, which same material also finished the bottom of the skirt.

◆ ◆ ◆

I could not help but notice the other day when I happened to see Miss Cornelia Jackson talking with Mrs. Antonio Reggio who was formerly Miss Claire Means, what a splendid foil they were for each other as Mrs. Reggio is so decidedly brunette in her type of coloring while Miss Jackson is such a decided blonde. It was at a large reception where I saw them. Miss Jackson was very attractive in a creation of pale gray cloth, the coat of which was trimmed in braid of the same coloring with [illegible] and velvet buttons used as trimming both on the coat and [illegible].

Her hat was a dark gray straw one, trimmed in the ruche effect in black chiffon with a single [illegible] rose at the side. Her bodice was of white [illegible] trimmed in insertion of Irish lace and had a [illegible] girdle of the [illegible] velvet with long loops and [illegible]. Mrs. [illegible] was noticeable for the new style and she wore which [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] embroidered on the left [illegible] while the opposite side of the [illegible] mesh of black lace was absolutely plain on her wonderful [illegible] which was brought out to excellent advantage.

I could not help [illegible] hear her say that she was [illegible] happiest sort of a newly-wed [illegible] she was doing her own housework and it was—to use her own phrase—"a scream," it was so [illegible] with a little system brought to play.

What Boston Women Are Doing

The Suffragists, the anti-Suffragists and the Progressives have been so much in the lime light the past week that [illegible] in their sets have been simply sizzling, and no one can accuse any of these of being the idle classes.

The bazaar which the Progressives gave Thursday at the Copley [illegible] ball in the evening was [illegible] ly one of the most interesting affairs of the week, while the private theatricals [illegible] Association gave at the Wilbur with the The Dansant held later in [illegible] went [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Miss Jo[illegible] for some time before going [illegible] in blue and [illegible] I have [illegible] seen her looking better.

Miss [illegible]ne Chamberlain, who won [illegible] at the recent Castle competition, wore a pretty tango gown of accordion pleated white chiffon trimmed with black.

Miss Mary Josephine Amory, one of the [illegible] charming girls of her set, was in [illegible]

Miss [illegible] two [illegible] roses at the corsage. Miss Norman was in pink [illegible] were among the most popular girls of the evening.

Mrs. Gaston, who chaperoned her daughter, was in black.

[illegible] green [illegible] Miss Bertha Godfrey was in pale blue taffeta and white lace.

Mrs. Benjamin F. Pitman was [illegible] cream lace, and Mrs. [illegible]ley wore white satin [illegible] with old rose, [illegible] rose sash and girdle.

[illegible] was looking wonderfully pretty.

Mrs. George L. Fearing, Jr., [illegible] was in white satin with drapery of net embroidered in silver beads and emeralds.

By Betty the Shopper

The frocks for Commencement week are always a matter of great importance to the young girl just budding into womanhood. Whether she is to be a graduate or merely a spectator at the festivities [illegible] difference. In either case she must be supplied with [illegible] frocks for the [illegible]

This year [illegible] frilly and feminine to the last degree. The more ruffles and puffs, the more youthful they will [illegible] as of course a characteristic always desired in the young girl's wardrobe

The materials are legion. So many in fact, that it would be hard to decide just which ones are the prettiest. And so sheer and [illegible] as to be little more than [illegible]

* * *

The revival of organdie will bring it into prominence for the Summer, and as most Commencement gowns are purchased with an eye to future wear, it will be a safe as well as a smart investment. The organdies this year are as filmy as chiffon, with more body.

Sheer lace flouncings mounted on net, chiffon or voile lead in popularity, while muslins, crepes and nets will make delightfully dainty gowns, and they are fabrics which admit of any style of development.

* * *

Cotton crepe has been talked for many months now, and in the lovely weaves the looms are turning out, its popularity will undoubtedly continue throughout the Summer. Many of these crepes are delicately embroidered in good designs so that very handsome frocks can be made of them.

Fancy checked batiste, daintily dotted muslins and point d'esprit, are fabrics which are always popular for the girlish frock, and if care is taken to get them transparent and filmy they will be quite the vogue for the Summer.

* * *

Book muslin, which is soft and sheer, but with body enough to prevent its being slazy, will be used a great deal for the foundation, which most of these frocks require. In fact, after looking over the smart new models now on display in the shops, one is convinced that Fashion's mandate has been to conceal the skirt foundation as far as possible in a series of flounces in one or a variety of widths.

* * *

These frilly skirts are made with from two to seven ruffles. In some [illegible] many [illegible] ascend corkscrew fashion from the hem to the waist [illegible] A pretty new note is the narrow [illegible] frill with which these [illegible] are finished. The scallop is also a very popular edging. Not long ago I saw a dainty miss in a frock, skirt of which was a series of [illegible], each one of scalloped shadow lace. The round neck corsage [illegible] three flounces and [illegible] was nothing more [illegible] In short, the [illegible] about it all was [illegible] itself, who seemed [illegible] that her frock was [illegible] it should be and that she was looking her best.

* * *

So much stress is laid upon the skirt this season that the waist is of secondary importance, and in most cases it is extremely simple.

The girdle is often the most decorative feature of the entire frock. Except in the case of the graduation gown, which, of course, must be all white, ribbons of the most wonderful colorings are used in the sashes. These may tie in long, flat tailor bows, concealing the opening of the girdle, or they may form a very effective cascade of loops in the back.

The sash may be arranged in any number of ways, some gowns having two or three.

* * *

One charming little frock I saw recently in a [illegible] street shop, by changing the ribbon might be used equally well for graduation and the other affairs of the week, where color is permissible.

Shadow lace in a very delicate pattern was the material used. The skirt was tiered in three flounces. The upper one had a shirred heading through which was run a wide satin ribbon. The bodice was of lace in the shawl effect, with a pointed front showing below the girdle of crushed chiffon. Small garlands of flowers were caught here and there in the lace. The whole had an effect of ethereal lightness, which was most attractive.

* * *

The compose suit in the worsted materials has given the designer his idea for the many charming combinations of material in the lingerie frocks. One sees taffetas combined with sheer voile; or chiffon cloth as a foundation with tunics and flounces of net.

* * *

When the voile is embroidered by hand or the laces used are of sheer and delicate pattern, these frocks are anything but inexpensive. Added to this the fact that they belie their name and would never withstand the ministrations of the laundress, it behooves the purchaser to have several less extravagant frocks to fall back upon. Constant wear would make short work of these dainty confections.

* * *

A striking lingerie frock, suitable for the more frivolous occasions of commencement week is shown at a Tremont street shop. Hand embroidered net is posed over a foundation of chiffon. The bodice was in surplice style, with sleeves of the finest hand run tuck. The double tunic of shirred net had a deep heading through which were run bands of white ribbon, ending with flat tailored bows in front.

The deep girdle was of white taffeta and the dainty little drop sleeve was edged with a band of taffeta. This dainty frock was something over one hundred dollars. The materials of course were of the [illegible] and most of the work done by hand.

* * *

Though the commencement frock is one of the most important of the young girl's life, it need not necessarily be an expensive one. Simplicity, of course, must be the key-[illegible] There are very dainty laces and sheer materials that can be bought for less than a dollar a yard, and if [illegible] taken to make it in some [illegible] up-to-date way, the young girl will be just as attractive as her richer sister, whose means allow the use of rarer materials, fashioned by hand.

* * *

Simplicity is always the key note of the graduation frock. This of course is not altogether consoling, for simplicity has the unhappy faculty of [illegible] high. We are inclined to laugh at the term, having in mind the expensive simplicity with which the woman of good taste and means is enabled to clothe herself. But it is really surprising the lovely frocks one can get for twenty dollars. Some very dainty ones, even for ten.

* * *

A large shop on Washington street is showing such a frock. Developed in dotted net, the skirt is accordion plaited, with a tunic of the plain net, edged with three tiny ruffles of val. lace. The waist, a very full blouse, has a frill of lace edging the round neck and extending down the front of the waist. The sleeve is elbow length, edged with val. and a crushed girdle of satin encircles the waist. Dainty roses of satin are caught here and there on the waist frill. This would be appropriate, either for the confirmation or the graduation gown.

* * *

All the commencement frocks need not be of thin material, however. There will undoubtedly be teas and dances during this time at which the silk gown would be appropriate. Taffeta and charmeuse, with taffeta an easy favorite, would be the best materials for the dance frock this season.

* * *

In delicate colorings, plain or with the faintest tracery of the willow patter, these frocks will be as necessary as any of the frilly ones in the graduate's wardrobe. Instead of ruffles, the puffed tunic is the vogue in the silk frock, often developing into queer little bustle effects.

* * *

Here again we have the combination of lace and silk with a most gratifying result. Very often the corsage and paniers of these dainty creations are of silk, while the petticoat is a series of lace flounces.

I saw a dainty model of this type on sale in a Washington street shop, not long ago. Pale green, pussy willow taffeta combined with shadow lace were the materials used. The bouffant drapery over the hips was of taffeta and the skirt fell away from this in three flounces of lace. The dainty corsage of silk had the V decolletage, quite extreme in front, while a lace jacket formed the sleeves and fell, cape like, over the girdle in back. A high Medici collar of lace made this frock appropriate alike for the tea dansant or the soiree.

* * *

Of course, milady will need a wrap to throw over her gowns and this year nothing is smarter than the cape. The shops are showing a cape especially named for these affairs, "The Commencement cape." It is much like the regulation opera cape, long enough to protect the frock, and often with a dainty hood attached to draw up over the hair. The new feature of these capes is the waistcoat most of them have. This is nothing more than two wide strips of the material, often a little full, which crosses in front and fastens in the back. Any material may be used in the construction of the cape. Those I have seen were in broadcloth and soft silks. They can be had in any shade to match the gown, or give a delicate contrast when all white is worn. These capes are inexpensive, from twelve to twenty-five dollars, according to the material used.

* * *

The hats of the season, lend themselves admirably to the lingerie gown. Since flowers are to be so good, this will certainly be the trimming selected. The new watteau shapes, of natural leghorn or lace crim wreathed with flowers or massed with delicate blossoms, will make a chapeaux any girl will rejoice in wearing.

* * *

Flowered belts and flowered parasols are bewitching little accessories for the cotton frock. The parasol, hat and fetching short coat or cape of the same material are attractive sets that will be worn during the Summer. One of these sets I saw recently was in violet tones. The hat, a smart, little toque, was of chiffon and violets combined. The muff, a great, soft lovely thing also boasted chiffon and violets so cleverly intertwined as to defy description, and the short cape was a clever combination of violet silk and chiffon. Worn with a dainty lace frock, I can imagine nothing lovelier.

* * *

With the all white costume, the white pumps and hose are best. For the dancing frocks there are any number of dainty styles in shoes to select from.

* * *

The newest thing in the dancing pump is said to be designed and worn by Mrs. Vernon Castle and named for her, the "Castle Pump." An elastic band across the instep and concealed by the strap or buckle is the distinguishing feature of this shoe. It allows one to bend the feet in any way without fear of losing the shoe. They come in silk and kid and can be had in colors to match the gown. Buckles of rhinestones give a pretty finish. Some even have steel buckles with a rather elaborately towered castle mounted on them, so far does the seeker after novelties go. The most alluring feature of the shoe is the freedom it allows in dancing. Since Mrs. Castle assures us that it is comfortable, then it must be, for few people are better qualified to speak on anything pertaining to the dance than this same young woman.

* * *

Bronze shoes are very good for evening wear and the gold slipper is enjoying a great run of popularity. The smart Parisienne wears no other color with her evening frocks.

* * *

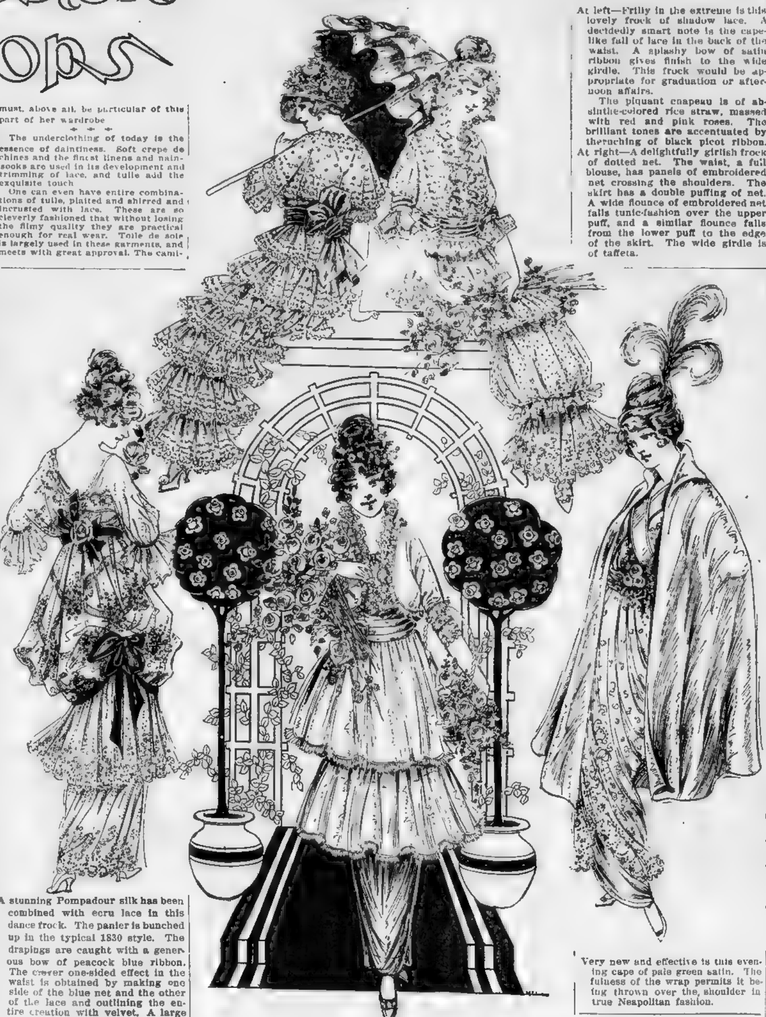
The transparency of the Summer frock has established a need for the daintiest lingerie, and Miss Graduate must, above all, be particular of this part of her wardrobe.

* * *

The underclothing of today is the essence of daintiness. Soft crepe de chines and the finest linens and nainsooks are used in its development and trimming of lace, and tulle add the exquisite touch.

One can even have entire combinations of tulle, plaited and shirred and incrusted with lace. These are so cleverly fashioned that without losing the filmy quality they are practical enough for real wear. Toile de sole is largely used in these garments, and meets with great approval. The camisoles, brassieres and corset cover must be of materials that will look well through the sheerest gown, and the designers had this in mind when they set about their work the past few seasons.

FROCKS FOR COMMENCEMENT WEEK



At left—Frilly in the extreme is this lovely frock of shadow lace. A decidedly smart note is the cape-like fall of lace in the back of the waist. A splashy bow of satin ribbon gives finish to the wide girdle. This frock would be appropriate for graduation or afternoon affairs.

The piquant chapeau is of absinthe-colored rice straw, massed with red and pink roses. The brilliant tones are accentuated by the ruching of black picot ribbon.

At right—A delightfully girlish frock of dotted net. The waist, a full blouse, has panels of embroidered net crossing the shoulders. The skirt has a double puffing of net. A wide flounce of embroidered net falls tunic-fashion over the upper puff, and a similar flounce falls from the lower puff to the edge of the skirt. The wide girdle is of taffeta.

A stunning Pompadour silk has been combined with ecru lace in this dance frock. The panier is bunched up in the typical 1830 style. The drapings are caught with a generous bow of peacock blue ribbon. The clever one-sided effect in the waist is obtained by making one side of the blue net and the other of the lace and outlining the entire creation with velvet. A large pink rose nestles in the blue ribbon cluster in the back, making a pleasing contrast.

Extremely attractive in its simplicity is the dainty frock of white chiffon cloth and taffeta. The chiffon cloth forms the smart bolero jacket effect and the double tunic over the skirt of taffeta. A sheer lace vestee and drop sleeves of lace are attractive features. The bolero, tunics and sleeves are edged with an accordion plaited frill of the chiffon cloth. The girdle is of soft white taffeta

Very new and effective is this evening cape of pale green satin. The fulness of the wrap permits it being thrown over the shoulder in true Neapolitan fashion.

If milady is a bit conservative about her underwear, there is a new trimming for the corset cover and chemise which is very pretty. The top of the chemise is first made of a gathered band of tulle, held in place by two rows of double openwork stitching, and then the trimming of fluted frills of tulle with a picot edge is added. The effect is one of extreme fluffiness.

FOR MILADY'S WARDROBE

With the all white costume this Summer, milady will wear a girdle of Roman striped silk and carry a bag to match.

* * *

Veils must be thin and inoffensive. The very newest ones are without pattern and of a fine single thread mesh.

* * *

With the ruffles and frills of the evening gowns, there has come about the fashion of wearing a black velvet ribbon about the throat.

* * *

Lucky indeed is the possessor of a cameo. They are ultra smart when worn as buckles to fasten the girdle.

* * *

The pagoda or minaret parasol will be popular. These come in taffeta with wide Roman stripe borders.

* * *

It begins to look as if the stiff choker collar may be with us again before long. It is only a step from the stiff, standing linen collar, high at the sides and in back to the true choker. Some extremists are already wearing stiff linen collars closed tightly in front with turn back corners, not unlike those worn by men a decade ago.

* * *

The low crowned broad brimmed sailor shape is very good. This may be trimmed flat or with a tall slender quill or ostrich, perched at the extreme edge of the brim toward the side front.

* * *

Wreaths of gold and silver leaves or wreaths of flowers are the latest thing to be added to the young girl's coiffure. In Paris where the idea is very popular the cherry blossom is the favorite flower for the wreath.

* * *

Scalloped edges make a very smart finish for the tunic of the taffeta or gabardine frock. These instead of being hemmed are bound with bands of inch wide moire taffeta.

* * *

Three rows of dark brown or black stitching on the back of the white and tan doeskin glove is very smart this season.

* * *

Accordion plaiting is enjoying quite a run of popularity. Some of the prettiest blouses have yokes of accordion plaited chiffon. Tunics of plaited net or chiffon are very good on the silk frock.

* * *

Moire and taffeta are the smartest materials for the afternoon frock.

* * *

Plaid veil and plaid duvetyne will be charming new fabrics for the Summer frock. They, of course, will be darker in tone than the usual gown worn in Summer, but in this lies their charm. The plaid voiles are also combined with plain silk for the tunic or tight fitting underskirt.

* * *

The newest camisole-brassiere has an inside section of lace attached at the under arm seam. Beneath these curved sections, which follow the bust line, are soft lace ruffles forming a bust effect.

* * *

Tussur linen will be a splendid material for the Summer suit. It looks a great deal like silk and launders beautifully.

* * *

Buckles, clasps and medallions are being made of wood, to hold in place the bows and girdle on the taffeta frock. Many of them are carved so cleverly as to be real works of art.

* * *

The sword-grass aigrette, varnished with a coating to render it proof against rain, is the vogue of the moment in hat trimmings.

Gifts for the Girl Graduate

The friends of prospective graduates will soon be puzzling over the problem of appropriate commencement gifts. As a custom, this gift-making is firmly established, and it is a nice way of congratulating the fortunate one of the completion of school work.

A leisurely search through the shops at this time of the year will often bring to light effective things that might easily be overlooked in the bustle and hurry of the note June days.

Many people prefer to extend their congratulations through the medium of flowers, and if they were but lasting no gift would be more acceptable.

A piece of jewelry makes an appropriate gift. The V-shaped shirt waist pin is the newest thing in this line. These can be had in plain gold or paved with stones. In fourteen-karat gold they sell from $5 to $30. One of these pins I recently saw had a pivot at the apex of the V, which permitted the arms of the pin to swing into a horizontal position, giving a bar pin effect. This pin was paved with stones and sold for $30, but one really had two pins for the price of one.

Strings of pearls are very fashionable now for street or evening wear and sell from $2 to $30. These, of course, are imitation, but look very good.

Amber, if genuine, would be very expensive, but one can get very pretty strings of amber beads for $2 and $3. Jet is holding its own as a popular neck ornament. Strands of net combined with crystal can be had from $2 up.

Few girls but would delight in the possession of a vanity case, and the shops have lovely ones for sale. In sterling silver these come from $7.50 on up. The price varies with the size and the etching on the case. Some very good-looking German silver ones with a small watch set into the mount can be had for $10.

Wrist watches may be had at almost any price. Genuine gunmetal ones sell for $7.50.

Sterling silver watches can be had for $10, and dainty little enameled ones are selling for $15.

Sterling silver watches, mounted on leather straps, sell from $20 up.

The girl who dances a great deal will appreciate the gift of a fan. Very pretty ones with celluloid sticks sell for fifty cents. With ivory sticks from $5 up.

The hand-painted fan is very dainty, and many of them are combined with delicate laces. They sell from $3.50 up to $30.

High back combs are very smart this season and would be a delightful gift for the girl who is just beginning to wear her hair high on her head. High combs bearing the name of the attractive tangoist, Jean Sawyer, are made of celluloid and sell for $1 and $3. Paved with rhinestones, they are from $5 up to $12.50.

Attractive pins for the new style coiffure may be had from fifty cents to $10 a pair.

A unique double pin sells for $7.50, $10 and $12.

Spanish combs with aluminum tops sell from $10 to $15.

Gloves are always acceptable, and at commencement time most useful. Sixteen-button white kid can be had as low as $2. Sixteen-button biscuit colored suede gloves sell for $3.50 a pair.

One might go on indefinitely with the list. There are so many things to give a young girl that will be dainty and useful. June is the season of parasols, and this year there are so many original shapes that a sunshade would be a gift worth while. Silk stockings never go to waste. Silver frames for the commencement pictures are also good, as are also pieces of ivory or silver to complete her toilet set.

Womans Era Is the Present Season

At no time has feminine independence been more pronounced than at the present.

Not only in her views on matters political but in the more commonplace one of dress.

In the women's shops are to be found skirts that are frankly cut in semi-trouser effect, or else so cleverly slashed and draped as to give the effect of division. There are canes similar to men's; wrist watches, cigarette and match cases and amber tipped golden holders; there are hats without a particle of trimming, save a narrow band or puggaree, and gloves masculine enough to be borrowed by husband or brother, were but the size right.

Then, in smartest contradiction to these seeming tendencies to adopt mannish costume, there is an overwhelming frivolity, fluffiness and daintiness, and a startling attitude toward totally discarding all heavy garments and simplyfying raiment to the classic scarcity of the ancients on Olympian heights.

This freedom from uncomfortable strictures of dress, while frowned upon by certain extreme moralists, has brought about a thought awakening and interest in out-of-door life, and far better health conditions. Not alone are the lungs given opportunity for expansion—the throat being unhampered by high, tight collar or the diaphragm by corsets, but muscles long unused have been revived. Trained down to girlish weight and suppleness by hours of tangoing and hesitating; thoroughly well groomed and with thorough joy of life, it is surely the woman's age, and her new freedom is expressed in her garments.

Shopping—A Commendable Habit
A BUYER'S OPINION

Women have always been blamed more or less for that characteristic known as the "shopping habit." This has always seemed a bit unjust, and on more than one occasion I have risen to her defence when some husband or brother has laughingly referred to his women folk as professional shoppers.

Of course it can be overdone. There are women, unfortunately, who rush through a shop, asking questions and handling stock in a way that tries the patience of the saleswoman in charge. These women see things in such a superficial way that it leaves no impression upon them, and then they rush pell mell through the next shop in much the same manner.

But the woman who shops scientifically—and I use the word "shops" in the accepted meaning—not as a purchaser, but a locater, as it were—this woman is a boon to the merchant. He has given much thought and expended much energy on bringing before the public the best articles in the most pleasing manner. This the woman of judgment readily appreciates. When her need arises, as it is bound to do, she knows just where to go and what to buy.

On the other hand, the woman who does not have the "habit" will often be attracted by some ad in a magazine on her living room table, and nine times out of ten will send out to Saginaw, Mich., or Oshkosh, Wis., for the very article she can find in her own shops, with the added advantage of seeing it before she buys.

Take, for instance, silk hose and underwear. Somehow women seem to think these must be ordered by catalogue or some foreign place to be just what they want. They would find upon investigation that nearly every make is carried in the shops of their own city at the same price, if not often less, and they will receive them within a few hours after the purchase is made.

We of New England are fortunate in having almost everything wearable made in our midst so no city can possibly have a better assortment from which to choose, but even we are forced to fight that tendency to buy out of town. "Distant pastures," they say, "always look the greenest," and I suppose this applies to human beings as well as the animal kingdom.

My advice to women is get the shopping habit. At least once a week look through the shops to find where you may best supply your future needs. Then the buyer on his visits to New York will not have the merchants of that city hold up to his astonished gaze a bundle of letters with the laughing remark, "Just received 'em from your city. Mail orders."

It's discouraging, when one considers that he has the very same goods in his city.

I fell to wondering how often I had been a like offender. Lured on by some attractive ad in a magazine, many times, I fear I have sat me down and ordered through some out-of-town concern the same things our own shops were selling.

Yes, patriotism is an all-embracing term, and like charity it begins at home.

Materials and Cost

Dainty voile, from forty to forty-five inches wide sells from 19 cents to 75 cents.

Embroidered voile sells from 85 cents to $1.50 a yard. This is from twenty-seven to forty inches wide.

White chiffon cloth, forty-eight inches wide, can be had for 75 cents a yard.

Thirty-inch wide plain Swiss sells from 20 to 50 cents a yard.

Plain batiste, forty and forty-five inches wide, is selling from [illegible] cents a yard.

French crepe, thirty-[illegible] inches wide, sells from 50 cents to $1.50 a yard.

Organdy, which will be very smart for Summer wear, comes from forty to sixty-seven inches wide and sells from 50 cents to $[illegible] a yard.

Stray Notes of Fashion

If madame rejoiced in the great freedom the wider skirt promised her, her joy was indeed short lived. The Paris designers brought out the wider skirt, and then, lo! to be worn with it, an underskirt so narrow that beside it the old hobble looked like an extravagant waste of material.

Many of the newest shades have the extremely long tunic and below this three or four inches of the underskirt is visible. The tunic is always full, some even being plaited, but, almost without exception, the underskirt is very narrow.

The waist coats for wear with the tailleur suit continues to be very popular and most of those now shown are in some white material, as pique or linen. For Summer wear these will, of course, be most practical and there is a freshness about them that is decidedly smart.

This rage for waistcoats has become so great, that some of the blouse designers have embraced it, and now one can purchase the blouse-waistcoat combined. The upper part of the blouse is usually of some sheer material, handkerchief linen or batiste, while the lower part, which is cut like a waistcoat, is of pique. Many blouses, to carry out the mannish idea, have a standing collar of pique and cuffs of the same material.

The extremely tight sleeve, after the manner of all coming events, is casting its shadow before, and the sleeves in some of the newer gowns are set into the arm hole without fulness. They fit the arm so snugly that in order to permit the hand to slip through, they must open at the wrist. There has always been such an attractive air of nonchalance about the kimono sleeve that one hates to see its popularity wane.

"To be or not to be" is the question when the bustle is discussed. Some there are who advocate it and bring it forth at the slightest provocation and there are others who will have none of it. In spite of the wrangle, most of the youthful Spring taffetas have draperies so arranged as to remind one forcibly of the bustles of the last century.

The one lovely thing about the disagreement of the fashion dictators, it gives milady a wide choice. She may go bustled or unbustled, paniered or unpaniered, just as she chooses, and still be conforming to the dictates of at least one of the Paris couturiers.

Of one thing we are quite certain, and that is the popularity of the cape. One sees it in every material and in every color. Some are long, some short, and some just "middling," but all are capes that give the graceful girl an extremely smart appearance.

The Venetian cape, which when properly worn has one side drawn across the front and thrown over the opposite shoulder, is one of the most attractive styles; then there are the shorter capes, known as the Page capes, from their resemblance to the capes worn by court pages. The afternoon capes are often attached to a sleeveless bolero with pointed vest fronts. The outing capes have the detached vests and are splendid for any kind of sport wear.

Hats are still small—in fact, are getting smaller, we are told. They hug the head save on the left side, where a tilt shows the coiffure and ear. And trimmings!—they are most daring indeed. Some of the smart new chapeaux have stiff little quills posed at various angles on the crown, as if by the random shot of a bow and arrow. Lacquered wings and plain wings are often perched on the crown in much the same manner, and the result is undoubtedly very chic. The vogue of the lacquered straw is not abating and unless all signs fail it promises to go through the Summer.

Poor Paris has at last become alarmed at the reputation she has gained before the world as a frivolous originator of all the queer things that women are wont to adorn themselves with. In self defence some of the worthy members of an organization known as The French [illegible] Patriotic League, have written an open letter to the women of Paris beseeching them to join in a movement to oppose those fashions that are not in accordance with womanly modesty. It is a good move and deserving of success.

FAIRYLAND ALIVE AGAIN

BRINGING SCENES OF LONG AGO TO NEW ENGLAND

Eva Roberts, the "Little Star."

Doris Horslin, who has a new dancing surprise this year.

Helen McCoubrey.

Fairyland, in all splendor, will be transplanted in Durrell Hall, in the Y. M. C. A. building at Cambridge next Wednesday evening, whe Miss Doris Horslin and her host of youthful proteges present their third annual recital and concert.

The songs, dances and recitations cover a period of a thousand years and the entire production will be put on by children. The stage setting and costumes have been imported from Europe and special dance music and lighting effects have been introduced to carry out the novel idea. More than fifty children, whose ages range from five to fifteen years, are included in the cast. Six-year-old Eva Roberts, the diminutive star of the production, is surrounded by an excellent gathering of juvenile talent. The majority of the scenes and situations are taken from time-honored fables, but skilfully staged, and the importuned music is bright and catchy.

Miss Horslin and William Flynn will give their own version of the modern dances. Miss Horslin has made a study of all the latest steps in the half-and-half, maxixe, tango and hesitation. The music has been arranged by Miss Alice M. Sullivan of East Boston, who will act as conductor. The numbers are all new, and aside from their dance value have a gripping appeal that lends an irresistable touch to the whole production.

Jack-in-the-box wooden soldiers, French dolls, fairy queens, butterflies, rabbits, lyre birds, Old Mother Hubbard, are only a few of the characters played by the different children in the show. The cast includes Hortense Berger, Bertha Berger, Dorothy McKay, Ruth Horan, Sadie Bakeman, Evelyn Murray, Priscilla Morey, Grace Maguire, Katherine Maguire, Flora Libbie, Mazie Lorman, Dorothy Klous, Helen McCoubrey, Mildred Coflan, Grace Healey, Mary Twomey, Lenore Kroh, Leontia Flynn, Dobette Kendis, Dorothy Gordon, Charlotte McKenzie and Marion O'Leary.

County Fair by Women

Perhaps no event in women's club circles this season holds more of interest than the country fair which the Brighthelmstone Club of Allston and Brighton is arranging for June 4, 5 and 6, on the old Allston Golf Club grounds, on Commonwealth avenue. Certainly it is a big undertaking, but the women of the club are proving equal to the task and plans are well in hand to make this one of the biggest events held by an organization of women in the State.

Mrs. J. B. Brown is the general chairman and has the entire club membership of three hundred enrolled under her leadership. Mrs. William J. McDonald and Mrs. A. J. Furbush are the assistant chairmen and with Mrs. William M. Morgan, the treasurer, and Mrs. Charles H. Woodbury, secretary, form the central committee. The organization is now practically complete, even to counsel retained, and everything points to a great success.

The list of attractions to be offered the public is an extensive one and includes among its chief features a horse show for each afternoon, a pet stock show, for which there is a long list of entrants, a baby show, a midway, with all the well-known features, not to mention some new and thrilling details, an amusement tent seating 1,500, where a continuous program of entertainments will be given each day, open air dancing, moving pictures, band concerts, athletic sports and a coaching parade for children on Saturday afternoon.

A bazaar, without which no country fair would be complete, will be held in the quarters now occupied by the Officers' Club of the State Militia, who will temporarily vacate the building for the accommodation of the women's organization. Here will be all the usual booths and exhibits, and allied to this department will be the junior bazaar, arranged by some of the older school children of the district. This feature will be a "push-cart" bazaar, the gaily decorated carts pushed about the grounds by young people in Oriental costumes, who will sell their wares from these.

The proceeds of the country fair will be added to the treasury of the Brighthelmstone Club, that the club may continue the many lines of civic activity, philanthropy and educational work for which it has justly won much favorable recognition in the past.

WE have been asked many times: "What is the meaning of Nemo Week? "What is the inducement to buy Nemos at that time, when I can buy them any day in the year?"

These inquiries do not come from the hundreds of thousands of women who have benefited by Nemo Weeks of the past ten years, and who are Nemo enthusiasts. For the information of others, we will explain what Nemo Week stands for:

ECONOMY Dealers everywhere prepare for Nemo Week by placing in stock the very latest Nemo models and replenishing their stocks of the well-known and popular numbers that are always in universal demand. This gives you selection from full lines of fresh, new goods, and the very newest fabrics and styles; therefore, the BEST POSSIBLE VALUES.

EDUCATION During this great trade movement, dealers vie with each other to give the best Nemo corset-service. This is highly important, especially this season, when Fashion's requirement is for a fashionable figure rather than a fashionable gown. The keen rivalry between expert fitters in the various stores insures you their most able assistance in the selection of the corset best adapted for each individual figure.

The Rivalry of Nemo Week is in SERVICE—not PRICE

Nemo Week this year brings you the only complete standardized line of corsets in existence, from the old short models to the extreme of present fashion, including—

KOPSERVICE—Four models—at $5.00
SELF-REDUCING—Thirty models—$3.00 up
LASTIKOPS—Ten models at $3.00 up

All our former successes will be eclipsed by this Nemo Week. Practically every woman will realize that she cannot afford to miss this opportunity to study the new Nemo models, which will be found in every leading Corset Department.

All Nemo Corsets represent at least twice as much value, in material and making, as any other corsets sold at the same prices. This is a bold statement, but its truth is known to millions of Nemo wearers. BE A WISE WOMAN! During Nemo Week, get better aquainted with Nemo hygienic comfort and perfect style. BE SURE that you get the RIGHT MODEL in the RIGHT SIZE, and that every corset bears the trademarks "NEMO" and "LASTIKOPS."

Please remember—Monday, May 4, to Saturday, May 9—at your favorite store.

All Nemo Corsets are Designed and Manufactured Under the Supervision of the Nemo Hygienic-Fashion Institute, New York

The annual festival in aid of the Home for Destitute Catholic Children will be held at the Mechanics Building, Huntington avenue, Memorial Day, May 30, under the patronage of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Home.

This year marks the home's fiftieth anniversary, and the ladies of the society wish to celebrate the event by adding a substantial sum of money to the home's fund for the support of the children.

The home has always been open for the reception of destitute and orphan children, and none are refused admission because of creed, color or nativity.

FAIRY PLAY BY CHILDREN

Producer a Girl of Fourteen Years

Miss Ruth Fielding's dancing and elocution pupils, who will present the fairy play, "The Fairy of the Fountain," in Cambridge.

Left to right—Grace St. Peter, Gertrude Gruhm, Ruth Fielding, Mabel Anderson and Florence O'Connor.

Miss Dorothy G. Conant.

Brattle Hall, Cambridge, is to be the scene on May 15 of a fairy production in two acts. "The Fairy of the Fountain" will be presented by the dancing and elocution pupils of Miss Ruth Fielding of Cambridge, one of the youngest dancing teachers in New England.

At the age of fourteen Miss Fielding has won honors as an elocutionist, dancer and teacher. During the past two years she has instructed classes in which many of the pupils were older than herself.

As a member of the class of nine of the Dorothy Dix School, which travelled through America, Europe and Egypt in 1912, Miss Fielding won success in the chief role of a musical and dancing specialty. So great was the success of the class in Europe that they were accorded a reception by the Pope. The little troupe was chaperoned by Mrs. A. V. Sharpe of Boston and backed by a prominent Back Bay man.

Although Miss Fielding has been assisted by her mother, Mrs. Robert Fielding, in preparing costumes, she has taken full charge of the little company which will appear in Brattle Hall. The ages of the performers range from five to fifteen years.

The play is in two acts, the first entitled "Maid of Snakes and Toads," and the second, "Maid of Roses and Diamonds." In the first act Prince Clever sees his future bride at a fountain designated by the Queen of the Fairies, who rises mysteriously from its waters.

The Fairy Queen, disguised as an old woman, puts the two sisters, Flirta and Lilla, to a severe test and declares to the latter that she shall marry Prince Clever and wear roses and diamonds.

During the play there are numerous solo dances and musical selections. Carl Asplund of Brighton, who has aided Miss Fielding in coaching the little ones, will act as stage manager during the performance.

The cast includes: Prince Clever, Ruth Fielding; Boy Blue, Grace St. Peter; Bo Peep, Helen Muldoon; Dame, Betty Young; Flirta, Blanche Robillard; Lilla, Mildred Clark; Fairy Queen, Gertrude Gruhm; Cupid, Francis Troy; Hunters, Evelyn Raynor, Florence O'Connor, Elinor Barrow, Mabel Anderson, Catherine Austin and Dorothy Costello; children of the woodland, Helen Brunt, queen, Helen Martens, Helen Nolan, Phyllis Hushen, Alice Sullivan, Eleanor Vahey, Grace Harlow, Doris Nutman, Emma McDonnell, Eleanor McCormack, Rosemary Hatfield, Magdalena Bieller; Spirits of the Air, Violet Aims, Bernice Casey, Dorothy G.
